STRATEGIC IMPLEMENTATION NOTES

- For the Frontline: The focus must remain strictly on diagnosing the customer's needs before prescribing a product. If a customer is buying a formal shirt at Splash, the associate isn't "upselling" a tie; they are "consulting" on the complete event look. This protects the brand's integrity.

- For the Ladder: Supervisors must transition from being "taskmasters" to "performance coaches." The scholarly research emphasizes that KPIs (like ATV) only improve when supervisors observe interactions and provide feedback immediately after the customer leaves, rather than waiting for a monthly review.
- For the Command: Store Managers must contextualize the data. Telling a team "We need to increase UPT by 0.5 today" is ineffective. Translating that to, "If every third customer adds a core essential to their basket, we hit our target, and here is the consultative phrasing to use," drives actual YoY growth.

Handling customer :

[Music] all right so what do we do if someone walks into your store and you're gonna approach them friendly say like hey welcome well you're not very bright say hey you know depends on your brand and how you would like to have the relationships more luxurious and more professional or rather half you know it won't welcoming laid-back atmosphere depends totally on on your barrier and style preference obviously so usually people would then be like oh yeah I'm just browsing sorry what happens then is they browse in the store and they might leave or they then approached you back I mean I cannot try this in this on however the first contact you have with your customers like it's a bit off so you know it's like slightly awkward but just because you have this fresh directly written blockage already in your injection and to be honest I found is the easiest when I was a salesperson in jewelry I found it the easiest to avoid this whole awkwardness by basically taking away the argument of the customers so by basically avoiding them saying I'm just browsing so for me the the easiest thing to do was the customer walked in and I would approach the friendly I would say hi there welcome how are you so it just immediately start a conversation with them I'm like this how are you is pretty often already although this is something that should be typical within like especially the UK or the USA et cetera might be sometimes just like don't really do it if a customer approaches the start we start usually with like hi there how can I help you rather than hey how are you how was your day so far talked about the weather you know whatever it just start with any small talk to just make them relax when they come in so you then already have them in the store they have relaxed and then you can just approach them and you know just ask them um are you

okay browsing for the moment or is there anything I can show you and they'd be like no no it's fine thank you I were just browsing and then you're like okay well that's fine if there's anything you would like to try on or if there's anything you would like to have a closer look at please just let me know I will be right here so then you know you take away all the pressure already and it's quite easy it's like just done and it's quite easy and you can then even go in and say like you know what I let you paint around in your very own time I just wanted it you know so if you so currently the new collections the case you want to have a closer look I'll be right over here you know whatever so you give them obviously knit impulse but then leave them alone back off so if you have a bigger team and you know it's quite a competitive environment that you have created then you might want to set some guidelines and rules how you you know want to treat the customer especially if obviously your SSP by yourself are on commission so you know because otherwise one person would always be close and stick to the customer and so just to in case they they are ready they can get the deal so yeah you want to obviously have a certain agreement on this how you want to treat your customers within your sales environment and another thing is to really relax your customer like and make them feel comfortable when they walk in is by just doing your everyday routines this does not mean to hide behind the terror or the computer that's not what I'm talking about right but I'm rather talking about visual merchandising you know taking care of your jewelry may be punishing so people can see that you're actually taking care very good care off your jewelry you should not you know entangle like necklaces or something like that so basically everything there's like that some are questions the quality of your stuff you want to leave that off but where you take care of your jewelry you definitely can do this sorry for example when your honey rearranging some rings or polishing some of your jewelry etc that's totally okay right you still want to greet obviously friendly the customer so you obviously didn't know what appeared to be too busy that the customer has a feeling of like disrupting you are interrupting whatever you're doing right but you want to send out the signal that you are busy enough to not occupy them and just you know have waited for them like kind of like a line who's waiting for prey so you want to definitely avoid them feeling you know the moment they enter the shop they are just like being watched so this is not what you this thing that you want to stand on so you want to distress them by me like you know Mikey I'm okay I'm doing here other stuff it's not that I have just waited for you the whole day and I'm really desperate to sell something so this is the image you totally funny avoid to display so this is why you it's good to be a busy in the sense I would like doing your everyday routines and doing just like stuff you can easily and trap so you then want to make sure and signal your customer that you're more than happy to interrupt for him that he obviously gets all the attention he wants but you know that you just leave him alone if he doesn't want any attention so this you I found this extremely helpful because the customer then relaxes immediately the moment the end of the shop they leave out this whole I'm just browsing kind of argument and you can just like start on a more chatty noid you can just start in a more humanoid where you'd be like just having a chitchat about whatever happened the weather or whatever and everyone is just doing this stuff and then naturally

the customer gets into approaching you asking before you know if they want to can try anything on alright for your harp it's a truss so you just gotta start this whole thing in a way way more relaxed way then if the customer walks in I'd be like if this happens because you you know you might just fall back into old habits or whatever that's totally okay so if they're custom and then be like yeah I'm just browsing and you'd be like okay fine that's that's totally alright yeah please yeah please feel free to have a look and if there's anything you would like to try on or have a closer look please just let me know as I mean obviously you can then still like relax the whole thing again and yeah just get out of the awkwardness I like the first no you have received why you know just being getting this objection thrown towards you so that's not a problem at all right so I again we are all just human so I you know just yeah that's fine of course and if there's anything you know and there if there's anything you want to see I have a closer look please do let me know right and this is where also the reset talked about this and this is also where them the model or the theory of the 5538 and 7% does come back in and remember when we spoke about the storytelling and widest air telling work we spoke about the ratio between body language how you say something in what you say so basically what you say only does account for 7% with in a face-to-face interaction so you know you can do whatever you want and say whatever you want just be like extremely happy friendly and basically just like let the customer feel that what you say do you mean right so if you say well no problem just please feel free to have a browse or we don't have a look and if there's anything I'm more than happy to help you so you know just the way you say things are way more important than

what you say I actually saw yeah I think this should just really relaxed you as well and take off the pressure a bit

Handling Every Sales Objection (The Right and Wrong Way)

I bet the sales objections that you've even never heard before or don't know how to answer today we're going to handle the most common B2B sales objections the wrong way and the right way roll the clip uh send me an email when you get a chance ah pass I know you're not gonna read it I'll send something up right away uh before I do though I'd hate to Club your inbox with something totally irrelevant would it be fair to take 30 seconds now to see if this is something that's relevant and if it's not I can skip the email and any other follow-up as well oftentimes when you send that email it never gets read or replied to yeah that's a bit too expensive so are my kids expensive compared to what oh what were you expecting you've done your Discovery you can even say something like sorry maybe I'm confused you told me this would solve challenges X Y and Z and that those were costing you well over a million dollars a year are those

no longer problems yeah we're not going to move forward please bro my children are hungry I appreciate you telling me how did you decide that if it's something you can change change it if it's not let them go there's no magical words they're going to turn a no into a yes thank them for their time maybe ask them for a referral and figure out what you can do better with the next customer just tell me the price five dollars take it or leave it yeah typically customers of your size sign on anywhere from ten thousand dollars to fifty thousand dollars is that within the realm of where you were thinking would you be happy to chat some more so I can give you a more specific number don't withhold pricing you'll just frustrate people instead give them a vague accurate range but explain that you're gonna have to ask some more questions to avoid misquoting them it's interesting but we just don't have any budget left ew that's fine I don't sell to poor people I hear you there but it doesn't help to plan for the future as well do you have a second to chat now and we can see if it makes sense of me to reach back out when your budget situation changes if they see the value they'll find the budget so dig in on where the value is missing actually we're already working with uh another vendor oh oh come on are they as good looking as I am I've heard really good things about them what do you use it for and what made you implement that in the first place if you know your competitors well enough you can even ask a question that highlights something that they can't do well that's great their product works really good for solving this how are you achieving that no that's not gonna work I can get it cheaper somewhere else yeah and I could shop at Walmart but I don't because the floors are sticky okay and let's say price was an issue both Solutions cost the exact same which one would you rather have why is that why else why else if price is the only differentiator that they care about it's going to be a race to the bottom is this a deal that you really want please take me off your list do you think I'm calling from a list how dare you sure you'll never hear from me again stop wasting your time and energy of people who are never gonna buy from you call the next prospects who you might actually be able to help would you like to join our list we send out a Weekly Newsletter for salespeople it's choker blocked with the latest sales techniques events and entertainment link to describe is in the description of this video so I talked to your competitor and they say it's garbage well that's full of really we have a lot of customers who chose us over them and there are other people who chose them over us it really depends on what's the most important to them what's your top priority

when choosing a new solution it can be so frustrating when competitors say bad things about us especially when they're not true but rise above it take the high road and stay focused on the customer better yet be super transparent with all the things that your product can't do it's better coming from you than your competitor I'm not authorized to sign can you give me the number of the person who is all right well let's not jump the gun on sending over a contract just yet then uh who else needs to be involved I'm gonna need to think about it thinkings for losers just sign the contract maybe I'm being a bit Frank but often when folks tell me that they've either decide that they're not interested and they want me to take a hint or we're missing something important am I overthinking this or if you feel that that's too Brazen you can try this great idea out of curiosity what exactly do you need to think about I'm actually part of a buying group names numbers I'll do the rest just sign off on it could be our little secret that's great would it be fair for you and I to see if this is a fit now and then if it is we can involve other people from that group this is a good thing you want multiple points of contact however if the prospect won't introduce you to them then you probably don't have a real deal on your hands I have actually never even heard of your company in 1979 no one had heard of Apple either I'm the Steve Jobs of HR software that's why I'm calling we help with challenges a b and c are any of those things you're looking to improve on this one makes me laugh because it is literally the exact reason why outbound sales exists to combat this make sure you mix in emails videos and social media touches to build awareness with your prospect yeah this is not a priority thanks for wasting my time oh is that because this isn't really that much of a problem for you or just because there are bigger problems going on if you're hearing things like oh this isn't a priority anymore then you're probably missing something in Discovery we don't have the capacity to implement that but my man my product's Gonna Save you so much time and money and if this solution was easier to implement would that change anything try and isolate whether implementation is really the problem or if there's something else you clearly don't understand my business go on enlighten me that's fair and I'd hate to make any assumptions which parts are you worried that I won't understand make them feel special everyone thinks their business is unique be curious yeah I'm just gonna have to talk to my partner do you need that permission to do everything live a little yeah let's get them involved but if it were just up to you what reasons would you have against moving forward oftentimes people aren't interested but again are just too afraid to tell you no so they push that responsibility onto their wife their boss their husband and then the ghost you will tell you that it's a no-go later on find objections go for the no if you need to right but there's still that one feature we're looking for that you just don't have I think you need to lower your standards what's the reason that feature is important to you okay and can you give me an example of how you would use that in this case by asking for an example you might find out that the thing isn't important or maybe it is and you're just not a fit for this customer that's okay I know I don't see the potential here for ROI ROI more like YOLO it seems as though you don't think this area could get any better than it is at the moment again if you're hearing

this then you need to do better discovery [Music] yo you think you can get rid of me that easily I have your name your number your address your email address hey it seems like we got disconnected sometimes it's worth just moving on and doing better next time there's a lot of players out there what makes you guys different uh we are better than them in every single way hundreds of things maybe to save us time going through them all what areas of comparison are most important to you don't fall into the Trap of listing features that they don't care about use this as an opportunity to find out why those things are important to them I'm busy do you think I was born yesterday if you're that busy then why you pick up the phone I'm ready John and if you're anything like my other customers in finance you're probably always busy would it be fair for me to ask for 20 seconds to explain what this is about and we find it's not relevant then I can make sure I don't disturb you again knee-jerk objections like I'm busy or I'm at a meeting

are often a symptom that what new set up front wasn't different enough sounded like every other call they got we have a video of great cold pool openers just here try one of those and see if it improves anything two words not interesting did you know you're not interested when I didn't even tell you why I'm calling sure and and when you say you're not interested is that because you believe things can be done any better than you currently do them or is it because you get like a thousand cold calls a day and you just want to get rid of me again another brush off validate and then tweak your opener of your mind uh you can call me back uh next quarter writing down my calendar right now speak to you on the 1st of January yeah I'd be happy to what's happening next quarter that makes you think it'd be a better time to talk how did you get this number I pulled it out of my ass yeah I spotted your profile on LinkedIn I know it's one of two things that made you look like someone who might be facing some of the challenges that we help our customers with so I used our data provider Zoom info lead IQ seamless AI to get your details and give you a call I'd be happy to reach out to them on your behalf and get them to take down your number however while I've got you would you be curious enough to know why I went through all of the effort just to try and have a conversation with you and sometimes when you tell them the honest answer they're like oh cool what's this about is this a sales call depends you buying it is do you have a minute call a spade a spade and be confident yeah actually I'm not responsible for these days what are you responsible for then oh thanks for letting me know I don't suppose you could do me a small favor who would be the right person to talk to at your company about this asking people for a small favor before you ask your main question often depressurizes the question get a referral and fall off of the person they mentioned saying Hey Jessie sent me over right but can it do this that and the other thing x y z a b c d the whole alphabet baby you want it we got it may I ask what's making X Y and Z top of mind for you right now customers are often asking a question for a reason you want to understand that reason before you answer it as Al Pacino himself said you never open your mouth till you know what the shot is spread the reviews online so you're terrible those are fake our competitors left them there that is concerning what did you read if I were able to assure you that that wouldn't be your experience would it be out of the question to keep chatting it's really important to understand exactly what they read and what they're worried about listen why don't I call you back later no you won't hey if it's not for you that's okay but is it worth taking two seconds right now to save you the hassle of the hundreds of people who've told me this I probably received callbacks from like five get a yes or no while you're on the call rather than losing them oh I'm going on vacation so that must be nice why don't I shoot over an invite for us to talk when you get back bonus points if it's a key account ask them where they're going and then send them a gift related to their destination if they're going to Hawaii send them a tiki shot glass well maybe not a shot glass but something Tiki related so I'm gonna have to cancel uh I'll get back to you with a better time I'm not gonna hold my breath great just sent you a new invite for the same time next week if that doesn't work here are some alternatives don't fall into the Trap of playing email tennis send them a new calendar invite and if they reject it and they probably weren't interested anyway how you've reached Jesse's voicemail leave a message hey it's your boy will Aiken from sales feed my number is 902-916-1177 call me back at your earliest convenience speak soon hey there John do not worry about calling me back I'm gonna send you a short email with what this is all about it's going to be coming from will Aiken at sales feed prospects when they get your voicemail aren't satellite with a pen and notepad taking down your numbers they can call you back and have a conversation with a salesperson makes you sound super intentional and that email will have a super high open rate that was a lot however there are three Universal ways to handle pretty much any objection are you ready number one what makes you say that it almost always makes the prospect elaborate more on what they've said number two silence this won't work on cold calls because people just hang up on you silence makes most people super uncomfortable so if you just wait

two or three seconds before responding to an objection often that will mean that process aspects will elaborate more on what they've told you to try and feel the silence and the third and best way to handle objections is preventing them objections happen because sales people let them happen if you're getting loads of knee-jerk reactions then it's probably a sign that you sound too much like a salesperson when you cold call people so improve your opener or improve your tone if you're getting lots of objections later in the sales cycle and that probably means you didn't do your Discovery and qualification well enough make sure you have a really good idea of the customers that you can help and the problems that you can help them solve and then ask questions up front to understand if they have those problems and if that customer doesn't have any problems then don't sell to them because other priorities are going to come up and this thing doesn't really need solvent would you have handled any of these objections differently which objections did I miss drop a comment below and I'll make sure to respond

Retail Sales Training: Basics and Roleplay

Retail Sales Training. Okay. Nobody likes the word training, but if you are a retail store, you need to understand that's money in the bank if you just use it. That's what we're talking about today. You know, I think one of the biggest things we have to understand is training isn't something we did. We got through it. Training is something we do. We just train, just like any musician, any filmmaker, actor, sports hero, you name it. It's just something we do. It's the way of life. And so if we understand that, then we understand, oh, well, we haven't been doing that for a while. And there's a lot we could learn. And that's what I want you to be thinking about today — it's gotta go beyond product knowledge, right? Like, you know, this shirt has a Davi Knit, and Davi Knits are made in the south of Daville — I don't know — or, you know, we get caught up in these particulars. Training, when they land really poorly to the learner because there's no context, why would anyone care? How do we get them to say, that shirt looks great on you? And by the way, the shirt does look great on me, thank you very much. But that's the point. How do I feel wearing it? Yes, those little facets that you could talk about. The product details might put me over the edge, right? Like, in this case, I can remove the collar stay so that when I get it cleaned, I won't have the nasty little ends that all get frayed or something like that. Oh, okay, and it'll stand up really well against the jacket. Okay, that all makes sense. Awesome. But you're not leading with that, right? Like, hi, try this on. You know, it's got a removable collar stay so you can wash it and put the collar stays in, and it looks fresh under a jacket. Yeah, I'm just looking for a shirt, dude. Like, that's a nice blue, right? So the joy of selling — I think it's one of the things that I enjoy the most. I've sold some pretty expensive items in my time. I've also sold coffee all the way down to $4 a cup at the end. The thrill of getting someone to say yes is what I love. Oddly, not everyone in the world likes that.

'Cause what have we heard in most videos, right? Or films. Anyone that's trying to sell you is evil. Mr. Burns always has the upper hand. You'll get disappointed greatly to the point you might swear. And it's always about a winner and a loser. Well, if you want to look at retail sales training, you gotta jettison all of that garbage you're bringing to it, because my guess is the reason you haven't been training people in a store is that's on your back. And so it feels like a fraud to be telling them to help sell. And look, all selling is the transference of feeling. 'Cause I feel good about something, I can transfer that to you. For example, my shirt — I have no trouble selling the shirt. This shirt feels great. It's one of the few in the world for a man that is not that extreme taper. So I can be comfortable sitting like this today and not be self-conscious. Well, that's a big point to me. So if you see another guy like that, I'm in. If I see a woman looking for a shirt for her father, or for her husband, I easily can make that point. If it's a guy looking for his husband, I can go through and still make that same point because I have used it.

Here's the problem though. Most of you can sell, I don't know, 10,000, a hundred thousand different SKUs. It's very unlikely everyone has used everything, so they have to be able to pull into the soft skills of how do I engage a stranger. All that to say is you don't have to have a long video to train. You could just say, today I wanna make sure that everybody says good morning, good afternoon, good evening. And you think, well, that's just awfully simple, Bob. That is the first part of the sales process that I have taught for 30 years.

It is consistently one of the hardest ones to get people to do, because one thing is we've got muscle memory. They may have said that for days, years, decades, received the same reply — No. You know, can I help you? No. And yet they still ask it. Like, they became deaf to their own customers saying, Nick, no, don't ever say that. So now you're gonna say, say something different. And when they get into it, their body just relaxes and says the same thing. You probably know that same feeling when you suddenly pull into your house and you think, how did I get home?

How did I get here? Because the oldest part of your brain, we call it the dinosaur brain, kicks in and says, hey, I got it. Cognitive abilities don't need it. Let's just go further on that while I'm at it. That's called the limbic system. Dinosaur brain down here in the middle is where we make critical decisions. Do I like this person? Is this a good value? That's where, like, I think of like a critical ant — that's the analytics of it, right? And that's where most of us try to sell. That's a hard place to play 'cause we don't always know what the markers are that will get them to say yes. Sometimes we fall into it.

I'll tell you about that maybe if I remember it in a minute. But the top is where we sell from, which is wonder. It's the reason why, when it's holiday season, I say when you sell something to somebody at the holidays and you say, who else is on your list, you'll see them physically look up to their left, access this part of their brain of wonder, and then might come back and say, oh, I'm sure you don't have anything. You're like, try me. Well, it's for my grandma. Oh, great. What have you gotten her in the past?

'Cause you've already had this conversation, right? It's easy. But if we don't have that, we don't get them to wonder, we're stuck in critical. And critical is a punishing place. Is it gonna be on sale tomorrow? Should I check Amazon or some other online retailer? What are my other options? And it's hard to justify all those. So being understanding that the brain — their goal is to get them to wonder. And when they start thinking, oh yeah, how would that look in my house? Or, oh, what else could I do with that? Or what else do they have here?

That's where it becomes fun shopping, and anyone can make that happen if you just train them. So we've talked about the greeting, finding something in common with somebody through something they're saying, something they're holding, something they're wearing — all always great. Alright, so this has nothing to do with retail, but I want to show you what it's like when you actually look for, find that point of contact and where it can lead you. Alright, so I am flying from Albany to Chicago a few years back, and this person sits down next to me with a binder — this big green, three-leaf binder. And I just turn to him, I go, wow, that really looks like some light reading for the trip. And he goes, yeah, I've gotta get through all of this. I am going from Chicago back home to Ohio. I said, oh, I grew up in Ohio actually. In Toledo. He goes, no. And I said, well, I didn't really grow up in Toledo. I grew up in Ottawa Hills. He goes, no way. I'm like, why dude? Why? And they closed the cabin door and the engines are starting, and he goes, well, I used to visit this family in Ottawa Hills.

And I said, oh really? 'Cause my dad was in social justice work, and I remember we had people over all the time. And he goes, I've been to your house. Your dad and my dad were best friends. You were probably too young to remember me. I would've been four years older than you, so I would've been like 11. Turns out he had eaten dinner several times at our house, and we had a nice conversation the rest of the way. Now, why do I tell that story? Because of Ohio? No. Because look at all the coincidences. If I hadn't bothered to open my mouth, do you have any idea I would've known that guy was sitting there? I guarantee you not. And another video that I've got — you could check out one of my stories about a very famous author, a very famous movie, a very famous book.

If you don't see it up there, you can check down below as well. We have gotten so caught up in our nutshell of me against the world that it's making people cold. I think that's really, you know, what retail is gonna be able to do with retail training — to break people apart and realize I gotta make that guy's day before he's gonna make mine. I don't care what he believes or what she believes or what she's wearing. I've gotta find it in me to find something to build a rapport with. And the more you can do that, retail is the great incubator. 'Cause you see so many people all through the day, right? So especially when you're in the holiday season, your crew should be able to practice this and do it. But a lot will pull back and say, oh, I didn't have time to greet the customer. Of course you do. Why can't you say good morning, good afternoon, good evening? Well, you know, what am I — wait, wait, Bob, wait, wait, wait — what am I supposed to do? Like if Jane said good morning and they come by me later on, what am I supposed to say?

Good morning. Why? Well, doesn't that sound phony? They've already heard it. I said, does good morning sound phony? And I said, maybe it's the way you're looking at it. It's just the way of just reading to your section, so when they get back there, they know that you're there. You work there. You're not just training stuff. But all that means you're gonna have to do something to get whatever training you're doing to stick. And I believe in doing role play. That means, you know, sometimes I'll go through and I will write out scenarios. You know, you're a shopper, you're 35, you like the Monkees. Okay, most of you don't know who that was, but that was a band from the sixties. You drive a brand-new Rolls-Royce. So I give that to one employee and I'll say, okay, that's your script. That's who you are. You're not gonna walk in and go, hi, I drive a Rolls-Royce. They've gotta find this information out. Fair enough. Okay. And I might say, oh, and I'll probably give 'em something like, and you're holding a Tiffany bag. Now I turn to the other associate — are you ready for this? Okay. All you see is what this looks like, and they're holding a Tiffany bag. Go. And what's really interesting is when they understand, oh, that's just a game. So I might ask them, oh, was that a gift that you got for yourself or someone else? I got it for myself. Ding. Oh, well, what else did you get there? It's like, hmm. Is that what we teach? No. What are you supposed to do? I've got to jump in with something personal from my life. Great. Have you ever been in Tiffany's? No, I've never been in Tiffany's. Okay, great. Have you ever bought any gift for yourself? Yeah. What's the last thing you remember that you really loved, that you bought for yourself? A Yamaha motorcycle. Great. Alright, so let's roll that back. Go back from the Tiffany's. Okay, so he says, would you buy that gift for yourself, or was that for yourself or a gift? I bought it for myself. Oh, nice. It's always nice to treat yourself. I remember the time that I — well, I didn't buy it from Tiffany's, but I got a brand-new Yamaha motorcycle. I still have it to this day. It's my favorite vehicle except when it rains up here in Seattle. Asked and answered.

Feels logical. If we don't do that, we just get to the, oh, the Tiffany bag. So did you buy something for yourself or someone else?

For myself. Uh-huh. So what can I help you with? Like, wow! Whoa! Like you just slammed the window on that guy. He was opening his heart, and he's like, yeah, that's not important. And now that I've opened your eyes to it, you will see it everywhere. 'Cause people aren't listening. We wanna react, get it outta the way. So role play takes a lot. You know, a third person like me or someone else that helps 'em is great. I also believe in using AI right now. You could talk to 'em. I've baked AI into our SalesRX online retail sales training program, so that after you take a short lesson, three to five minutes, you'll be able to go through and go right into a role play, and you're talking to a computer back and forth.

And then you go to a quiz. And you know what's interesting is 83% of our users report a double-digit increase in six months, 'cause practice does make perfect. Then, as you get used to tracking and doing accounting, like every day we're gonna hold people accountable, then you start looking at the numbers, and the numbers should go up. If they aren't going up, something is off. Because a lot of times I hear people like, oh, my crew does it all the time. Great. Send in the mystery shoppers. Well, I don't really wanna know that much. Uh, okay. I never want to be surprised by the experience a customer has in my store. You know, Five Guys — you know, the peanuts on the floor and the hamburgers, really greasy hamburgers — they send out two mystery shops every week on their franchisees. They wanna know, this is our brand, this is not our brand. Look at Chick-fil-A — amazing — fast food has a really strong tradition of training, service, and procedures, and you see it really easily there. Most people don't see it in retail 'cause it feels different. And my goal is that when you're using, for example, my entire sales training process, no one knows but you. But one of my clients came back to me, and she said, I have never had so many people call me and say, that's the most amazing shopping experience I've ever had. She goes, they don't know what SalesRX is doing underneath it. They just know that they feel something. And ultimately, that's what we're trying to do. So when you're thinking of retail sales training, understand that the basics are gonna come down to, you know, are they trainable? Are you training a process, or are you just trying to say sell more? Are you going through and holding 'em accountable? Are you going through and finding a way to build rapport? And then are you rewarding your crew that do it?

And if you do that, then I think, and if you already wanna do that, then I've got another video for you ready. It's just right up here at the top. If you don't see it up there, you can see it down below in the text. And follow that, and you're gonna be able to go even deeper with me. Retail Doc out.

Winning Techniques to Boost Retail Sales

You start your day with a good attitude and a cup of Joe. It's a beautiful day. Selling weather. For the sake of nostalgia and a little pick me up, you put on a Zig Ziglar CD as you head to work. By the time you arrive, you've drained your coffee cup and filled your mind with a strong, positive outlook on life. When your caffeine slash Ziglar induced high can't get any higher. A customer leaves off your first sales conversation of the day with one of the most common statements that you'll ever hear in sales.

The three words you seriously, passionately do not want to hear, I'm Just Looking. Today on the 5 Minute Sales Training, how to handle the number one sticking point for so many salespeople. I'm just looking. Hey, welcome back to another 5 Minute Sales Training where today we're tackling that dreaded I'm just looking statement. If you've been enjoying 5 Minute Sales Training, please do subscribe to the channel and hit the like button, if you don't mind. Your engagement really helps us get these episodes in front of more salespeople.

You know, for many sales professionals, I'm just looking represents a sales stopping moment. They may maintain a calm external demeanor, but the words I'm just looking often trigger internal dialog like this. Great. Another just looking. The whole world is just looking. Do you think I could get like, Oh, I don't know. One person who's actually in the market to buy, our marketing sucks. I know. Grumble, grumble. Lest you think that your customers exist for no other reason than to waste your valuable time. Let me remind you that saying I am just looking is about as common as the sunrise.

And by the way, you do it too. Are you seriously telling me that you never use that line when you were a customer? Look, there's a description for the phrase I'm just looking, and that description is normal. In fact, it's not only normal, it's honest. I feel quite certain that if we hooked our buyers up to a polygraph test, whenever they said, I'm just looking, they'd pass. They very likely believe this is exactly what they're doing. Just looking. Are you willing to take a polygraph to that effect? It's important for you to remember that when they say this, they haven't yet seen your home. They are not yet in love, Yet, with what you have to offer. So, yes, they are, in fact, just looking. All right. First things first. Stop fretting over normal behavior. Don't let that phrase take you off your mental game even a tiny bit. This is merely a customer being a customer. Don't fault them for that. Instead, let's start over. Act on these three strategies. Number one. Let it roll up your back. The most important step is to let this statement roll right off your back.

It is water and you're a duck. Since this is normal buying behavior, there's no reason to believe that it means this customer will not purchase. They say. You forget it. You both move on. It's that simple. Don't even flinch when you hear it. And there you have it. Just profound advice for the day. Be a duck. Okay, number two, develop a positive auto response. It is essential to have an auto response for each of the more common statements and delays and objections that you regularly hear from your customer.

Deliver your auto response in a casual, conversational tone. The customer said, I'm just looking. My response? Of course I understand. Or Got it. I'm glad that you chose to look here. Communicating this kind of acceptance and understanding is a huge draw to your customer. Third opportunity, offer to help. Respect the fact that customers do not want you immediately up in their face with a sales presentation. Instead, extend the conversation by offering assistance in that looking process. Your well timed well-toned response might sound something like this.

Of course I understand and I want to assist you in any way that I can. Can I ask you a few quick questions just so I can help as much as possible in your search? Or how about this? Got it. And thank you so much for looking here. I want to make this as painless as possible for you. If I can ask you just a few quick questions, I think I can make this very easy. Now, look, you'll always face this. I'm just looking customer. It's only a matter of how you will respond, both with your mindset and your technique.

Have your auto response ready. Stay mentally strong and you will be well on your way to changing your customers world.

3 Selling Techniques in Retail | Jeremy Miner

all right do you sell retail any type of retail where customers walk into your store if you do I'm going to show you here on this Vibe board I'm going to show you three very important things that you'll need to understand at Master when you're communicating with your prospects if you want to increase your Revenue drastically and do that right now right so first of all go down to the bottom of this video hit the Subscribe button that's probably important for you hit the Subscribe button and to the right of that or maybe the left I don't know somewhere in there there's like a little bell that's your notifications button hit the notifications Button as well so you get notified by YouTube Every time I post a new training video which I typically do two to four times a week so number one is this is probably one of the most important things that you're coming up to you we have to learn how to prevent the number one objection

that you typically get anything retail whether you sell furniture or you sell you know at a medical you know at a medical spa or you sell you know at uh just anything car dealership I mean anything retail where people walk in and you say hey welcome into the store how can I help you what does the average Prospect say just looking just looking and then it's over and you're like uh I don't know what to do so I'm going to show you what to do here that's the number one thing and then I'm going to show you two other things that are going to be very very critical for you so we have to prevent the I'm just looking around objection from even happening in their mind now we're going to do this and this is going to sound kind of crazy but we're going to do this by actually telling them the objection before they bring it up we're going to seed it in their minds so they can't give us the objection all right let me show you to do this uh okay

so here's what you're going to do hey yeah welcome into the store today are you guys just out looking around see how I'm giving them the objection okay hey welcome into the store today are you guys just out looking around now we're going to say that in a curious tone I'm going to come back to that in a second all right now look here are you guys just hey welcome into the store today are you guys out looking around do you know what they're going to say yeah we're out yeah yeah they're just gonna say yes okay instead of saying just looking now they're being more popular like yeah or they'll say yeah yeah we're just out looking around and then you're immediately gonna go into what's called a connection question this is called an napq connection question that immediately takes the focus off you and puts it directly on the prospect you're going to say this oh and you do you know what you're possibly looking for now you're going to say that in a curious tone okay you're also going to use this word this neutral word here possibly all right all that does is it lowers your prospect's guard the biggest thing you want to do in any type of sales environment is especially retail is you got to get the prospect to lower their guard disarm them okay so hear my tone Oh and do you know what you're possibly looking for okay now sometimes they might say oh I'm not really sure or a lot of times I'm like yeah I'm looking for this okay well in that case and then you lead them over there or they might say well I'm not quite sure and you might say well for example are you possibly looking for and you repeat back two three or four different options okay so the biggest thing here that I wanted to show you that's going to help you is just give them the objection where they can't give it to you you just give it to them hey welcome into the store today are you guys just out looking around yeah yeah yeah oh okay and do you know what you're possibly looking for in a curious tone okay all right let's keep moving on here now the second thing that you really have to understand in sales and Retail especially is you have to know what's called tailored tonality you have to tailor your tonality and every single thing you say and especially the questions you ask because your tone is how your prospect interprets the intention behind every question you ask that's how they interpret what you mean by the question or why you're asking the question is based on your tonality okay there's certain questions you have to ask Morna confuse tone and I'm going to show you some retail examples here I'm saying where you're going to use a confused tone that sounds counterproductive Jeremy why would I ever act confused I need to act like I know everything well I'm going to show you how to do pattern interrupts where you're confused use a confused tone where they come to your rescue and help you I'm going to show you what to do here there's other questions that require more of a curious tone that causes them to feel that you're asking the question because you're generally curious that opens people up there's other questions when you get halfway into the conversation maybe three-fourths of the way where you've built a gap from where they are to where they want to be you've built a need you've helped them find problems they didn't know or you need to ask it in a challenging or skeptical tone I'm going to show you what I mean by that and give you a few Industries in retail and then there's other questions you have to lean in and you have to learn how to shift your tone down into a concern tone a tone that shows more empathy that causes the prospect to feel that you understand their unique situations

it causes them to feel that your concerned for them that they might not get what they said they wanted all right so I'm going to show you some different examples for retail for that I gotta get a drink here I'm dying now here's a confused tone example let's say the prospect says Ah you know let's say you're uh let's say you're you're a car salesperson they come into the dealership and there's a Cadillac Escalade there it's a hundred and fifteen thousand dollar ride and the sales the prospect has never spent that much on a car they're shocked that a Cadillac would be that much you know after covid where you know three four years ago that same car might have been 85 or 90 then they're just shocked and they say you know this is just a really big decision for us okay I might say big decision now see how I used a confused tone big decision big decision I'm confused that causes them to open up and tell me what they mean by a big decision that could mean something completely different to every Prospect you talk to that literally says the same words I can literally just repeat back those maybe objection and they open up it's a clarifying question but I use a confused tone or let's say they're like I you know I just need some time I really need to think that sort of save you sold Furniture in a furniture store I just really need some time like those sofas are you know uh I don't know I just I need to really think about it I can lean and say think it over if they're like I need to think it or think it over yeah I need to think it over because I'm not sure if I have the budget well now you know it's not really think it over it's a money objection it might not feel like they have enough money now you know what objection you're dealing with so you can help them overcome it see that's an example of a confused tone I could go on for hours on that tone now

there's other tones you got to lean in and it's more of a curious tone okay let's say let's just stick with those two retail examples cars and Furniture we've trained thousands in those spaces really tens of thousands in any type of retail space I might ask you know what I'm trying to find out their situation these are called Situation questions that help you in the prospect understand what their real situation is so one of my first situation questions oh and what what type of vehicle do you drive now oh and and what type of uh car do you guys typically drive now see that's a curious tone see what I did my tone causes the prospect because it's asked in a curious tone to open up because they feel like I'm curious that's why I'm asking the question okay in the same sense let's say that you're selling sofas and they're talking about their living room I might say can you maybe walk me through the the layout of your living room so I understand better can you walk me through the layout of your living room so I have more understanding oh what's the layout of your living room so I have more contact store oh how does your what's the kind of the layout of your I guess your your dining room area so I understand a little bit more see that's a once again curious tone see what I'm doing there a curious tone triggers curiosity causes the prospect to open up emotionally and go deeper all right I'm going to keep going here all right you also want to have questions that are more of a challenging or skeptical tone that's apt you're not going to ask questions in a challenging and skeptical tone in the first two minutes of a conversation we do don't have much trust or credibility yet that's more like three-fourths of the way into your sales process all right so what let's keep it on the car dealership so and let's say losing my mind here let's say that their problem that you're able to help them find is they have this used car but it keeps breaking down all the time on their way to work and they've been laid to work several times and they're a little bit concerned of what that they might get fired because they're always late because of the dang car okay so what happens if you you know you keep the car and it keeps breaking down on the way to work I mean what would happen to your job at that point see that's more of a challenge okay what happens if you just keep this car and it keeps breaking down on the way to work I mean what would happen to your job at that point see I start off with more of a challenging skeptical tone and I actually end that in a concern tone okay see what I just did there I'm going to show you that example here my tone again okay but what happens if you just keep this car and it keeps breaking down on the way to work I mean what would happen to your job at that point so I start off skeptical which raises their emotions okay and then I lower it back down at the very end here what would happen to your job I mean at that point concern tone causes them to feel what that I'm concerned for them that if they don't change the problem is going to stay the same and actually get worse they're going to lose the job see what I just did there all right now let me give you an example of more of a concern tone here okay let's say that you sell Furniture we'll just stick to those two retail stores now this works for any retail store I mean we literally train every single industry on planet Earth including yours watching this video right so you just got to plug in your space here and let's say that you just can't move them forward you've called them a few times you've showed them all the different furniture they could get and they just they're just iffy and you can't overcome their concerns you're just this is your last step and you just say John um put your hand on your chest too if they can see you and even if you're on the phone because it helps like your body language affects your voice right your tone right what's really holding you back from moving forward so you can relax at night and get all that stress off your back now let's say if I'm selling some type of chair you know those chairs the massage chairs let's say you're in a furniture store and they've been looking at this massage chair that's like five grand I'm just throwing out a number and they just wishy-washy now what is the problem okay he can't relax at night his back's all tied up he's got a lot of stress and so remember the chair is there to solve that problem help them relax to get the stress out of his back see how I'm tying in the problem and the consequence of the problem into the question using a concerned tone what's really holding you back from moving forward so you can relax and really get the stress out of your back and I lower my tone that concern tone causes the prospect to feel what that I'm concerned for them if they don't do anything about changing their situation if they stay in the status quo and the problem stays the same see what I just did there all right and then the third thing here is precision probing now that's called nepq and we're going to ask what's called a problem awareness question gotta get a drink here okay now let's stick to those two industries okay furniture and cars doesn't matter the retail just plug it into the framework all right uh let's see I mean and let's say they tell you the kind of sofas they already have right so this is a way to kind of almost push them away a little bit where they pull you back in okay I'm going to show you how to get your prospects to actually do all the work rather than you trying to do all the work we can show you how to get them to sell themselves right to pull you in whereas you might have been trained or forced to learn how to get you have to do all the work you have to do all the selling all the persuading and I'm sure you're getting exhausted from that way easier to get your prospects to do all the work because after all they're the ones that have the problems not you right and your solution actually solves their problems so why not learn techniques how to get them to do all the work and sell themselves all right I mean the sofa you have now I mean that's and that's a fairly decent piece I mean which caused you to feel that it's not comfortable enough though see what I just did there I mean the sofa you have now I mean that's a fairly decent piece I mean what's caused you to feel that it's not comfortable enough well I mean it's not comfortable enough because and they start telling you why they're looking for something else but more importantly who are they telling themselves that's called self-persuasion see how I got I push them away a little bit notice I said it's fairly decent I didn't say it's awesome you don't want to go too positive you don't want to go too negative you just want to be kind of in the middle I mean that sofa you have now I mean here are my tone skeptical tone see what I just do what I'm doing there is I'm getting to the defi then to defend themselves on why they need to change is that probably good for you where they defend themselves on why they need to buy a new sofa okay I mean the sofa you have now I mean that's a fairly decent couch I mean what's caused you to feel that it's not comfortable enough feel not think you want to keep them on their emotional side of their brain that's where human beings make decisions you say think they go back to logical based thinking which is not good for you right come from now cars let's look at the cars here I mean you've had this car five years I mean it's a fairly decent ride I mean what's caused you to feel that you might want something better though I mean you've had this mustang for four years I mean that's a fairly decent car I mean what's caused you to feel that you might want something better well the reason why I want something better is X and Y and Z see how I'm getting them I'm like almost pushing them away which causes them to pull me back in and to defend themselves on why they need to change now the tone is really important here because if I said I mean you've had this car five years it's a fairly decent car what's caused you to feel that you might want something better though well I don't know we're just kind of looking around see how your tone affects how that comes out I mean you've had this mustang for five years I mean that's a that's a fairly decent ride a lot of people would say that's that's a pretty decent car you have I mean what's caused you to feel that you might want something better though see concerned tone okay does that make sense all right so those are the three things to start to learn to master if you want to be very successful in retail or any sales environment number three Precision probing okay very very important for you we also want to focus on what's called let's go back here tailored tonality your tone is probably the most critical part of this process to learn okay we can train you all that in our virtual training courses for our clients if you want to learn how to do that okay train thousands in your space and then the number one thing is prevent the number one objection of I'm just looking around by just telling them the objection oh welcome into the store today are you guys just out looking around okay see what you did all right hope that helps

have you ever wondered why a company like lauro Pian can sell a white linen shirt for £625 when you can get a perfectly functional linen Shir from somewhere like H&M for 16 bucks well the onset is linked to behavioral psychology and recognizing that selling luxury Creations requires a uniquely different set of skills than traditional selling my name is Paul Russell and if you're new to my videos I'm the managing director and co-founder of luxury Academy where I've had the privilege of collaborating with globally renowned luxury businesses helping them to forge meaningful relationships with high netw worth clients I'm going to take you behind the scenes of luxury selling focusing on the psychological aspects so you too can learn how to influence high no worth clients to buy from you now the first and I think perhaps the most important lesson is that luxury is all about desire you see desire is an intensely strong emotion and we as humans will do almost anything in its Pursuit it's desire that enables Brands like lauro piano to sell breathtaking expensive shirts as I mentioned in the introduction a huge mistake people often make is confusing Desire with needs and wants nobody needs to pay that much for a shirt that's why phrases like needs analysis within luxury annoy me so intensely because I don't need an S-Class Mercedes or an X7 BMW I may want one but that doesn't automatically convert to a sale now does it if you step back and look at luxury critically yes a Rolex watch is nice and the craftsmanship is beautiful but what do I need to watch for well to tell the time of course so a Casio or timx would do the same job the secret behind why I desire Rolex so badly is down to something called identity markers whether we like it or not luxury products are perceived as symbols of achievement money and social status thez barenberg is a fantastic example of an identity Mark it's one of the most sought after and expensive handbags in the world and it's known for its Exquisite craftsmanship its luxurious material and its iconic status and despite its I wateringly high price tag which can range from thousands to hundreds of thousands of pounds demand for the burken B far exceeds its limited Supply owning the BG becomes part of your identity it tells a lot about how I want to project an image of myself to the world so I I suppose the burning question is how do you tap into that psychology and sell luxury well the best advice I can show is selling luxury is very much about creating an experience let let me explain High net worth clients hate sales people so typical High Street sales tactics where you may try to convince a person they need an item simply won't work I think it's helpful to remember it this way a Supercar salesperson does not sell cars to rich people instead they help a high Networth client acquire the right vehicles for their lifestyle the two may sound similar sell and acquire but it's very different psychologically a jeweler doesn't help someone buy a bespoke CTI necklace instead they help them own it the key here is that you must sound and act like an expert not a salesperson High Networth clients are surrounded by experts all day every day another way to sell luxury is to harness the power of exclusivity as humans We crave exclusivity even in the most mundane things priority check-ins or priority boarding at airports Uber black over Uber X whe over Uber a great example of exclusivity is the Pinnacle of exclusivity the American Express Centurion card probably better known as the AMX black card now with a £10,000 joining fee and a 5,000 annual membership charge you may be surprised to learn that the card has pretty much the exact same functionality as the MX platinum card but as we now know it isn't about the need to have a credit card to pay for something it's all about the exclusivity of taking out a black AMX of which there are only a few thousand in the world if you want to sell luxury you must tap into this gving for exclusivity by creating experiences that reinforce something rare finally there's the emotional connection to a brand and how it makes you feel and this is created through the history and Heritage alongside the craftsmanship of course it all plays into an emotional narrative you have brands that are loud and proud like verace and Gucci they proudly plaster their logo and icon over everything in an attempt to scream to the world please look at me and then there are quieter GRS like Brunello Chell who managed to sell incredibly expensive products in a much more understated fashion

let me get something off my chest there's a neest trend and I hear people talk about it a lot recently and that's affordable luxury let me be clear this is nonsense if a product of service can be afforded by the general population then it isn't luxury the lack of exclusivity will never trigger the parts of the brain that get a deep sense of satisfaction and let's be honest superiority that a real luxury product producer so to summarize the key takeaways luxury is about desire not needs and wants High net worth clients buy luxury as as symbols of achievement wealth and social status and we call these identity markers and if you want these clients to buy from you need to create an experience of exclusivity and you need to be an expert not a salesperson I hope you find this useful

you ever wonder how those really successful salespeople just have that Gift of Gab just know how to weave a story into their pitch well guess what it's not by mistake it's actually by Design and today's video is all about how we're going to bring that magic into your own sales presentation so ultimately you can sell more and make a better connection with your [Music] prospect hey it's Tom Jacobs here I love dropping these sales nuggets for you to improve your sales and in today's video storytelling is one of those things that I love to include in a sales presentation whether it's my own or ones that I help design with my clients because story makes a much better connection with that Prospect but it doesn't happen just by chance it's actually by Design and in today's video we're going to go through exactly how to produce a story that sells for you the first thing that you have to understand is that in storytelling and in sales it's about creating a connection with that Prospect and enabling them to actually visualize the success that you can help with as we all know people buy with emotion and then justify that with logic and when you can have a very compelling story that gets to an emotional reaction in your prospect you're going to be more likely to make that sale on that emotional level and then it's just a matter of justifying some of the facts and figures that go along with your product to justify that sale and that's why storytelling is so important to include in your sales presentation another aspect of Storytelling in sales is knowing your audience and being able to fit the appropriate story that's going to make a connection with that audience and whether that's an audience of a thousand or an audience of one during that sales presentation by understanding what their desires are because you've asked that what why what why framework that I keep teaching about you know what their dream goal is so now you can create a story based on a previous client that you worked with to get them to visualize them receiving that same benefit that you were able to achieve with that previous client and it sounds something like this you know your situation reminds me a lot about Jeff Jeff was in blah blah blah and you can now go into that story with that nice hook to bring them along on that ride which will get to that sale story structure is also another very important thing in storytelling you can't just like try to tell a story and think that it's going to get to the point there has to be a structure to it and that structure can be as simple of what's that defining moment what was a problem what were the situations that tried to keep that person from getting to that goal the villains in the story and who was the guide obviously you're the guide because you're the one that's helping that Prospect and then what was the ultimate outcome that's a very simple framework for creating a very impactful story but you have to go through and write it out beforehand or else you're just not going to have the words necessary to create a really compelling story that ultimately leads to the sale authenticity is often a word that gets thrown around a lot in sales and just in life in general but here when you're telling a story you can't make stuff up you have to be authentic in your storytelling and be able to create those emotions that go along with the story and so whether that's your own personal story that you can now make relevant to the sales presentation or it's a past client you need to have the details to make sure you create an authentic and compelling story or people just won't believe you and if they don't believe you they're not going to buy from you now once you're into that storytelling you have to create visuals in the mind of your prospect and one way of doing that is creating color and texture within your story and that's what I call it but basically you're getting into the details you know I could say something like well the other day I was driving my car and now if I ask you what car was I driving everybody that watches this video is going to have a very different idea of the car

however if I said I was driving my 1985 blue BMW that seen better days now you have a very clear idea of what that car is and now you're in that story with the Storyteller the those are the type of details you need to create into your story to bring that Prospect in on the story and create that vivid imagery to bring it alive and ultimately make the sale even if you have The Gift of Gab just going off the cuff and telling a story is not going to work for most people that's why it's so important to one script it out but then also practice it and practice it and practice it you know like my mom always says you know what's the best way to get to Carnegie Hall practice practice practice that's the same in sales you have to practice the story in order to get it to a point where it just falls off your tongue and you can weave it naturally into the sales conversation which then feels really nice for the prospect to hear and now they have all these visuals and then they're able to get to that emotional reason to buy your program now when you get the storytelling right you're going to know immediately that you have done a great job because now that Prospect is going to shift a little bit closer to you they going to see their eyes widen they're going to be asking a little bit more question oh tell me more about that or they're just going to be excited to hear more about your program and that's exactly where you want them to be and that's when you know you have this storytelling just perfect my challenge to you is to start to now create those stories that bring your sales presentation alive so go ahead and create those stories now and drop me some comments let me know how it works out for you and also if you're interested interested in creating a really great sales framework I've put together a training course called the whaty whaty framework and I have a free training available to you that link is down in the comments so go ahead and grab that training and see how you can bring your sales presentations alive now don't forget to like and share this video [Music]

A Step By Step Guide To Selling High-Ticket Furniture

what is up you guys in today's video I'm going to give you a step-by-step guide to closing High ticket furniture sales let's Dive In [Music] well hey welcome back as always my name is Zach I'm the host here on this channel and I'm so grateful that you're here we talk all things woodworking business on this channel so if you're trying to grow a woodworking business this is the channel that you want to follow I'm telling you we've got over 300 videos at this point that are going to help you grow your woodworking business today's video I want to give you the step-by-step guide for selling High ticket Furniture products online there's a process to this that has worked for me that's working for over 25 of my clients inside of the woodworking business accelerator program and I'm going to give you what that is today I'm going to show you what we do how we do it it's really kind of like a two-part system that's broken down more and I'm going to go into that in this video so basically at its highest form its highest level you've got marketing and sales you have a marketing strategy do you have a sales strategy most Woodworkers don't have any type of marketing or sales strategy they just think I'm just going to build awesome stuff and people want it if people knew about you they would want it right but they don't know about you they don't know how great your company is or how great your products are or what they set you apart so you have to figure out how do I create a brand that stands apart let me break this down into really five steps for you okay so number one is to create and run paid advertising to your Facebook business profile so you need to have a business Facebook page that is where you post all things business all your products you've got your logo you've got all your branding you're building a brand on that page on that

profile you're talking about reviews posting reviews great reviews that you've gotten but you want to run ads you want to Target people that would be interested in your products and you want to point them back to your page people that don't know you are discovering you as a result of these paid ads what's going to happen is if you run it to your messenger profile they're going to send you a message asking for a quote on a piece of furniture number two is you want to have a sales script that you do the exact same thing with every single potential customer to maximize your close rate now you've got to find a good sales script I just got done recording probably one of the most valuable videos that I've ever posted on YouTube and it is the exact sales script that we use inside of the woodworking business accelerator program you're going to want to check that out if you'll use that cell script I promise you you will see a giant jump in your closing rate and selling way more furniture okay that's number two is you want to have a sales script that you do the same thing every single conversation number three is you want to handle their objections and so when you walk through the script you finally give them the quote what are your thoughts on that they're going to have objections they're going to have things that they like they don't like might like the price it might be over their budget they might like that it's going to be you know six or eight weeks before you can deliver it they might want it in two they might not like the fact that you require 50 down so maybe you can work with them to get to 25 down they might need to talk to their husband all these things are objections is what these are these are things that legitimate buyers tell you and again there's a big myth that like buyers don't have any objections and that's pretty

rare every once in a while we'll get a sale where somebody just buys without any objections but most people have objections and so you want to be able to handle that in a really great way so number four is you want to follow up consistently with people that you did not close and so if there's any reason that they didn't immediately close when you had a conversation with them you want to follow up with him and stay consistent with him and you want to let them know they might say something like hey let me visit with my husband about that you want to let them know okay that sounds great when can I expect to hear back from you if I don't hear back from you by tomorrow at let's say noon is it okay if I follow up with you most reasonable people are going to say yes okay so follow up consistently and then number five this is just so important and I see people dig their heels in the ground and not do this and that's to close the gap between where you are and where they want to be so where you're at if you want to sell it for 4 000 you want to deliver it in eight weeks you want to get a 50 deposit if that's where you're at and where they want to be at it's 3 500 in four weeks with a 25 deposit figure out how to meet them somewhere but you gotta ask them because if you don't ask them

they're going to just assume that the price is the price there's no negotiation they're going to assume that the lead time is the lead time there's no negotiation they're going to assume that the 50 deposit is what it is there's no negotiation but if it means the difference between you either getting a four thousand dollar sale or you not getting a four thousand dollar sale you should probably bring that up and say hey where are we at on this where do you need to be so that we can go ahead and move forward with this we'd be honored with love to build your table for you just that simple question if they say I really didn't have a 4 000 budget I had a 3200 budget okay well I can't do it for 3200 but could you do 35 I'm willing to move to 35 if you're willing to come up a little bit you meet them in the middle you're still insanely profitable especially for you guys out there that are a one-man show right now working out of your garage if you're doing these things you're going to sell more High ticket custom furniture I promise and so if you have questions on this let me know but this really is the step-by-step guide to selling High ticket custom furniture so number one the really at the base of it all is you have to create a brand you have to have good looking photos good looking video on your page if you have trash pictures and trash video man you're just not going to sell a ton you're going to struggle number two is you gotta have a marketing strategy to get in front of people consistently whether this is paid advertising whether this is Craigslist or Facebook Marketplace or whatever a really great business owner is going to be doing all of it they're going to have paid channels they're gonna have organic channels they're gonna have all these ways that they're attracting people to their business and then lastly you have to have a sales script and a process for closing deals and if you can do those things if you can get those three things right that's really the front end of your business and that's really what we help with the most inside of the woodworking business accelerator program so if you're trying to grow your woodworking business check that out we do it based on where you're at geographically so we may have someone in your area but if we don't you're up next we can take you one as a client so hopefully this has helped check out the resources Below in the description with that being said

if this was valuable make sure that you subscribe make sure that you give me a thumbs up it's going to help us reach more people and make a bigger difference in Woodworkers all across the world so appreciate you so so much and I'll see you in the next video

How To Increase Sales In Retail Clothing Store

How to increase sales in a retail clothing store, if you're looking for, how do you end up getting more of that apparel to go out the door? Then I got the video for you. If you're looking for, I'm looking all these piles of merchandise. What can I do better? Well, I've got the video for you right here. And finally, if you are killing it and your store is always busy, your turns are really high, well, then there's always something to learn, so stay tuned. Okay, so one of the ways you can make more money in your retail store is to just understand that people are busy. People have money. They might casually walk in, but maybe they would like a personal styling session, instead of hoping that that one person who does really well is on your floor, why not offer it? Why not have it on your website? You could that's perfect group of chat bots. You could have just simply, Hey, would you like a styling with Stacy and show the time her calendar? And someone could pick that even, you know, 24/7 if they live in the area, and then Stacy's calendar gets booked. Now, it might not happen all at once, but when you put it out there, you're making your website do more to get people in the store, and not just hoping people walk around. All right. So number two,

I'm just going to tell you is, don't do this. I see too many clothing stores. We're just going to pull out some old funky rack from, I don't know, the 70s, 1870s and we're going to pull it out with our leftovers and leave it at the front. I'm just telling you, it looks terrible. And unless you're a consignment store, you're really cheaping the whole brand that you're supposed to do, because the front of your store is just like your home. It has to look perfect. So I would put out a red welcome mat every morning. Yeah, don't leave it out there. Probably be stolen. I would probably put a couple of planters on either side with plants or something. I know you hardware stores saying, Why would I do that? Well, you can do something masculine or a little bit more, you know, contemporary, but the idea is something green, something to break up the concrete that's out in front of them. Some people have done really nice they put a logo light up above that lights up to show the logo on the sidewalk in front of you. That can be kind of cool. There's a lot of things that you can do on the outside of the store, but let's be honest, how many times did you walk out and go to the front of your store and take a look? Well, we don't do that, Bob, we come in the back. I know that's the point. So go through, walk through the front of your store. You will be shocked at cigarette butts or dead plants or god knows what, in front of your store and inside, just looking at your windows, oh, look at all that cellophane tape from December and it's June. Look at the spiders. Look half of those lights are out. What was that promotion that's over there in the corner? But you've got to get your focus of what the customer looks at. So while we're talking about Windows, you know, you probably have seen some other videos I have, and, in fact, I have a whole keynote on visual merchandising and display for retail stores. But one tip for you right now is for your windows, go through and get your post it note and go for well, you could be in the window and do this, but it's better you just walk out in front of your window and grab a post it note and wherever your eye is. So it might be like five eight for me, 510 if you're six feet, don't choose someone else. If you're five feet, choose someone else, but someone right in the middle, average, right? And then put that post it note right on the window, right in the middle, and know that that is where the best and brightest is. So if you've got a new briyani suit that is three grand. That's the one I have up there. It's going to be complete with the pants, it's going to have the shoes. It's going to be amazing. And that's the window. But Bob, I want to put four in there. Look, the goal is to get them to come in the store and wonder what else you have. The goal is not to go through and say, here's everything. You know, we've all seen stores like that. It's a jumble.

It's hard to shop, and more importantly, you're adding friction, the more you can focus our mind down. Because, let's face it, they're probably walking in with their smartphone in their hand, and they're looking down, and they don't even look at what you're doing unless you focus down right. Understand the color choices. If I did red, black and white, strongest colors you can make a window in, you know, take a Valentine's window. Put a black box in there somewhere. It's fine. White and red always will read like Christmas or Valentine's. You got to break it up. Yellow and black and white. That'd be interesting. How would we do that? Maybe a Yellow Taxi cab that would get somebody's attention. Because if I can get the prop interesting, then I can probably get the attention to the outfit. One thing I like to do for the Windows, is I call it a pig in the window, I go and I get a little plush pig. Can I have windows or not? Not not important, little pig. Just put it right next to that Brioni suit at the bottom. People come in. What's that pig doing in the window? Get you to come in. Just be honest. It's fun. It's interesting. There's all kinds of ways you can do that, but your goal to attract people to an apparel store is show that you know how to put an outfit together. And it's not what's cheapest other thing, final thing on the Windows is to think about put a QR code in the window, because what if it's, you know, 12am a guy is walking home from a really great date that he had with his wife at the restaurant down the way he sees it, she goes, you'd look good in that. When do they open? Oh, they're closed on Mondays. And, yeah, and. All that interest is lost, or maybe that's where you're gonna have your styling maybe, you know, not sure if that's gonna fit book a styling call with us, but you're always thinking ahead, what's gonna get their attention, and then, how do I hold on to that? And you know, if you're watching this, you probably have loyal customers, I'm sure. And you might know, oh, that's Jane, or worse, that's, that's the goat skin boots that I sold? No, that's a name. It's not goatskin boots, because we often remember we sell them. We don't know the name. So the more you can clientele. Some people that can do that in an app. Some people, it's connected to their POS, and it's giving you the information everything they bought. I don't know if you're too old to watch, remember the movie Clueless, and Alicia Silverstone is going through her closets all digital, and it's trying to put together outfits. That's where we're going to end up being with a digital closet, we'll be able to see all of that. But if you have class purchases, and you can say, Oh, she likes Eileen Fisher. She likes Max. I don't know women's brands, I will, but if I knew that, then it would tell me how I want to talk to her in the future. So using AI to come up with a great email, a handwritten note, hey, we just got this in from Eileen Fisher. I think it'd be great taking if you took a picture when she was in and then be able to superimpose that on the outfit. That might be fun, too. But the goal is to also hold on to those loyal customers you've got, because your top 10% are where the money is. They are not the ones that you want to keep saying stuff is 20% off because she just bought that $1,000 scarf she's want to see even four months later, it's 20% off because she got the value of it right. She was wearing it for that trendsetter and when nobody else saw it. But we often forget that we could segment the list, because, you know, and I know I do call people who buy everything on sale bottom feeders. It's horrible, but the reality is, they're not making your money. They're not making your money. They're waiting till something is 50% off. And frankly, if your margins are not at least 55% you're probably giving money away because of all you paid for it to get here, or tariffs or all kinds of things. So the more you think about well, I have two tiers of customers. I want to separate them. You're going to be a smarter retailer. And how could I forget the smartest thing you do in retail is to train your crew. And I have several videos on this channel. I also have sales or X, my online retail sales training program, but it comes down to garbage in, garbage out. If you haven't been training your crew and it's just whatever they feel like doing, they're going to parrot whatever they heard. Welcome in. Don't ever say welcome in. That is like carnival barker to a tent welcome in or tour bus, welcome in. That is not a greeting. It is. It is like a shrug from a retailer. You want to say good morning and shut up. I don't want to hear good morning. We have everything on sale 20% off here, and our boots and saddles are an extra 30% and if you sign up today with our credit rights. Just shut up, because the first 10 feet is where you start to build that relationship. And relationships start with Yes. Would you like to join me for a drink tonight? Yes. Well, that's how it starts. Same idea, good morning, good afternoon, good evening, good morning. Oh, good morning. Oh, thank you. Great way to start. Remember, sales training is behavior training. What do I mean by that? It's like dieting, right? If you buy the book, do you get credit for that? No, do you if you read the book, do you get credit for that? No, what? What do I get credit for? If you are in Starbucks and you look at that 1200 calorie almond croissant, which is my favorite almond croissant, you say, No, I'll pass right? You have to train the mind the same way. Oh. I want to say, Hi, good morning, good afternoon. How you doing? That's casual. I want to say, Good morning. Know what I want? I'm going to build rapport. That's another video. But how do I build rapport with somebody? And then I might ask him, what's this? Is the first time you've been in our store? Yeah. May I give you a brief store tour, sure. And if they say no, fine, you can go on. But they say, Yes, you got one to two minutes to talk about your basic layout. The brands are important to you. So they start to feel this store is for me, or you say, Is this the first time you've our store? No,

I'm in here a lot. Oh, great. We moved everything around. May I give you a brief store tour. Sure? Why? Because I get them to linger. I'm more likely to get them to discover something they can't live without. Most people go shopping something changed in their life. There's an event coming up, something broke they want to add on. They want something that they don't have to complete another project, something changed. Nobody just goes in and says, I got nothing to do today. They might tell you that. And I know people who say, Oh, you know, the husbands come in and and they get parked, well, their wives get their hair done or something. It's like, well, that's a chance for you to do something. No, they never want to change the way you're talking to them.

Because if I keep saying the wrong thing over and over again, you would think you'd learn like, oh, I shouldn't say it. You know, I used I'm a keynote speaker for retailers out there, retail doc.com, and there was this one example I used to use from my days in western wear. And I'd show a picture of this one brown boot and a yellow boot. And I'd say, so which one do you think is more expensive? And raise your hand, the brown boot, and hands would go, or the yellow boot. And I go, and you would be. Wrong, and I wondered why they didn't want to play with me after that, because I said the wrong thing to them. Immediately, I was like, oh, that's on me. Most time we lose sales. Sales is on you. If you aren't stylish, if you can't put an outfit together, and you have people who look like they rolled up their clothes, put them in a backpack and then showed up to sell high end fashion, you're going to be in trouble. You're selling luxury goods, things that cost a certain amount of money. They have to have space around them to tell the customer, oh, this is luxury versus mass market, where they'll slam together on a rack, right? So we have lots.

We can be talking about. We have so much. We've talked about visual merchandising, we've talked about training. And the other thing to remember is your best customers, you have to be able to talk to them, so having a list that you can segment out and make sure these are the ones who are top 10% they're golden, and we're gonna do something special for them. And these are the people we love, the sales and the two do not meet, that really is great. But the final thing I want you to be thinking about is you're an apparel store. You are basically a toy store for fashionistas, right? So your whole mantra is, just try it on. No, I don't want to try it. Try it on. Come on. You'll see when it's on, you'll really like it. No, I don't think so. Would you like to play a game with me? Sure? How about we take that and see which of these two pants go better with it? They might pick great. Well, you might want to try it on. My goal is to get you to try it on. If I get you half naked in the fitting room, I've got you. The most underused place of a apparel store right now is the fitting rooms. They are the neglected child who is just, you know, stay away and you know, people want it. It's kind of dark. If us is really your store, I would make sure you had air conditioning in it for one and additional lighting so that it doesn't feel creepy when you go there, but it needs to be manned so that someone can say, I'm just going to try these on. Great, let me. Let me get it started for you. And knowing what sizes they've got in their hand, you know what sells well again, your stylist or you knows what sells really well, you should be able to get that size and throw it over the top. I found this blouse you might like. No, I think that's fine. Just try it on. That's all I'm asking you to do. Just ask that second time. Just try it on. And when she comes out, I want you to have three ways she can wear whatever that item was. I don't know what that would be. Bob, better start checking tick tock and and the YouTube that's not my world. That's your world. My world isn't the people. Your world is the actual product. But you should have three ways they could wear it. What could they do with it so that it's not just this one? Just this one event they're going to right? And then, never forget the handbag, the shoes, the scarf. Everything makes the difference for a guy. We're pretty limited. All we can get is a watch, maybe a little chain, a belt, belt, belt, pants, right? But we don't ask for the belt. We just kind of like, assume that guys, guys would wear a belt for 40 years until finally, their wife is like, you know, change damn belt. But you know, if they get a new belt they're going to go into, yeah, I just got this, look at this. Isn't this great? We give up on guys because guys are we think are complex, much simpler. Just show us that we matter. Make us feel that we matter. Follow the steps of my sales training program, and you're going to find that they're the easiest, because they're going to buy four of whatever the pants or their shirts are, because they don't want to do this again, and they had a good experience with you. And you know what they're going to do is they're going to say, This is my store. And so when you're looking at how to increase your sales in a retail apparel store, then look at all these steps I've given you, and understand, yeah, it's a big responsibility, but I know you can do it. And to that end, I've got a free offer for you. I want you to check out right up here in the top, there's a link you can click, and if it's on your smartphone, can't quite see it go down below, you can click it in the text below. But let's change the dialog of how everybody's going online to realize, Wow, I got a lot of people in my store. We're doing great.

9 Minute Training To Destroy Any Sales Objection

How do you get your prospects to persuade themselves? I don't have the money. Will it work for me? I'm not sure I should do it. Next year's better. I'll do it down the road. I need to think it over. Need to do more research. How much is it going to cost? These are frames that your prospects have. And until you learn how to get them out of their frame, what are they going to do? They're going to give you these objections over and over and over and over again. And I just don't like getting objections. It's just not fun. Anybody ever get a call or worse an email? The email death. Ah, we really liked you and what you had to say, but now's not a good time for us. We'll get back to you when we're when we're interested. Keep in touch. What are you going to do? What are you going to do now? You're going to call them back, thrust some rebuttals, tell them why they're wrong. How often does that work? Oh, I mean, it works every once in a while. Numbers game, right? I don't want you have to play that game. It's a really rough one. Not very fun. Okay, here's what we're going to do. Somebody be the prospect. You be the prospect. Yeah. What do you sell? Health consulting. Health consulting for what? Uh people that have low energy. Oh, like a coaching program.

Yeah, like health coaching. Like for entrepreneurs or something or just anybody? Uh mainly entrepreneurs. Okay. Low energy, brain fog, poor focus. And and what are the consequences if they don't purchase your program? Uh they won't have enough energy to dominate the business. We'll lose a lot of money and a lot of productivity. Okay. And if they lose a lot of money and productivity, what's the consequences? Like what happens that then? Uh the business won't make as much money and yeah won't perform as well. And what happens to the business then when it doesn't perform? Probably won't be around much longer.

And what happens then when it goes out of business? Uh they'll probably be busking outside the casino. Oh, no. No. Seriously, on a serious note, like what happens to the business owner when they go under? Yeah. Yeah. Not good things. Like what? Tell me. Uh they'll be unemployed. Okay. And they're not making any money. What happens to their family? Come provide for the family. Yeah. It's much deeper than just fixing their health. Yeah. See how I could go six layers deeper than that. That's where the sales made. Not up here about getting healthier. Yeah. It's the consequences of not of what can happen if they don't.

It's the fear of getting them to feel and see what the future could look like if they don't solve that. It's a pain of fear. It's what are the two biggest emotional drivers that cause a human being to want to change? pain and the fear of future pain. So if you can't help them relive their pain of their current situation, their past, and then have a fear of future pain, they feel no need to what? Change. There's that word change again. And if your prospect feels no need to change, that's why they give you objections and that's why they don't buy from you even though they basically raise their hand saying help.

Do you have book calls? They book on your calendar. Yeah. So, they're basically already raising their hand saying, "Help." Yeah. Right. Should be easy. Okay. So, you call me back and you're like, "Uh, you know, yeah, we really liked you and what you had to say, but decided now is not a good time for us. So, we'll get back to you already, mate. Keep in touch." Well, I'm not that cool, but thanks for the compliment. Can I Hey, can I um can I ask you something? And you can always get back to me down the road. Can I Can I ask you something? Sure. How um how how can I communicate to you that you you might be making a mistake without you getting upset with me?

Yeah. Sure. Yeah. Um it's pretty hard to Yeah. What's No, you cannot communicate to me that I might be making a mistake. What did I just do there? What was his frame? Now's not a good time. I'll do it down the road. Keep in touch. That's his frame. How do I take him out of that frame and reframe him to a new way of thinking? Now, what that question I just asked here, that's an ADBQ consequence question. What I'm doing here is I'm deframing him with this question. Does that make sense? I'm taking him out of the frame with this question. Did you see his reaction? And we're role playing. I can assure you if you do this type of stuff outside of a role play, your prospects will not know what's going on. I can assure you, wait a minute, your tone sounds concerned. Did you learn that somewhere? They're just not going to know because they're emotionally involved. Now, you guys know because you see it. I'm showing you. If you had no idea and you just saw me do this, you'd have like, "Whoa, what just happened?" Okay? It's hard for you to come back like, "No, you can't tell me." You're like, "Uh, sure. What's going on now?" Why would I use a concerned tone? What does a concerned tone seed in his brain? How can I communicate to you that you you might be making a mistake without you getting upset with me?

That concern tone seeds what? Doubt that I know something he doesn't know and that triggers doubt in his brain where his guard comes down and he becomes more open. See, I'm deframing it. Hey guys, Jeremy Miner here. Look, a lot of you leave comments wanting me to help you sell more. So, the easiest way to get a hold of me, the quickest way is to text me. So, text me right now. It's 48-637-2944. So, 48-637-2944. Listen, I started this company to help you learn how to close more deals, but do it the right way. Text me right now. Let's get back to the training video. Now, it's not over because I haven't got you out of that frame yet.

I'm just starting the process. Okay? So, then I'm going to loop back around and I'm just going to make something up because this is a completely different industry. So, I'm just going to make something up with you based on your industry. Okay, do that again. I'm going to do the whole thing and I'm going to ask I'm just going to loop back around and make something up. Say the thing again. Yeah, sorry, mate. We uh had a look at it and um it's not the right thing for us right now. So, we'll get back to you when it suits us, but thanks for your time. Yeah, not a problem. Um can I can I can I ask you something? You always call call me in a couple months.

Can Can I ask you something before I before I head out? Oh, no. I don't really have time, mate. Sorry. Well, yeah. I mean, I don't I don't want to get you angry at me. I guess the question I had for you, and like I said, you always get back to me. How how can I communicate to you that that you might be making a mistake without you getting upset with me? Yeah. Because because I'm concerned for you because I mean what what happens if you don't do anything about this and you keep having these issues with your gut where you're having these like bowel movements during the day at work and then your boss starts getting upset with you like how long is he going to give you before he let you go?

Not long. Well, what what's going to happen to you and your family at that point? Yeah, I probably won't be a be able to provide for them. Are you going to let that happen? No. I mean, how does your spouse feel about it though? Like, does your spouse like does she want you to keep having these issues? Were you like having a hard time even performing at work? Like, does she want you have to keep going through that? No, she's pretty pissed at me. How do you mean by pissed? Oh, she's probably probably not happy with me. Okay. Well, I don't want I don't want you sleeping on the couch tonight, man. But but but in all seriousness,

Does she want you to get your health back so you can really get promoted into that CEO role so you can make more money for the family or what does she want you to do? Yeah, she would love that. Okay, but why now? Like why why is this so important now? Like for you like why why look at doing this now? Like why not, you know, push it down the road like a lot of executives do who end up never fixing their health and they never get promoted? Yeah. If I if I pushed it back, my health would probably just get worse. And then what happens at that point? Yeah, my performance would decline. Yeah. What should we do then? What? Yeah, we should do what you well were selling me. Okay. Okay. Now, what did I just do? What did I just do? I did a lot there. How many frames did I go through? How did your spouse feel about repeated back the negative problem? Hard for him to say like, "Oh, she wants me to kill have the negative problem. What am I doing there? What am I starting to prevent there?

Him having to what? Talk to his partner. I'm taking him out of that frame." I took him out like four frames there. You guys probably didn't know what I was doing. Okay, you see see what I'm doing. What else do you feel like I did there? Identity frame. Well, for you,

I mean, why look at doing this now? Like, why not push it down the road like a lot of executives who never end up getting promoted because they never get their energy and health back? That's an identity frame. See how I'm getting him to run away from that type of executive that has negative, negative, negative? Does he want to be like that executive? See how I'm getting him to push back against that? That's called an identity frame. I'm getting him out of his current way of thinking. Push it down the road to not identify with all those other people out there that keep having that problem. Does that make sense what I just did there?

10 Steps That'll Turn You Into A Sales Machine

I have been in sales for over 30 years and I've sold something to every Fortune 500 company at least once most of those sales have been in the tens of millions and I have formulated a 10-step plan to make any sale happen this process will help you learn to sell and if you like it or not you are a salesperson people will judge you they will make decisions about you as a personal brand and your product without you even realizing it so if you can't sit and listen for 5 minutes to all this knowledge I'm going to give you for free I'm afraid you're not going to make it so there's probably 10 steps to sales both how to actually think like a salesperson get sales done closed and then ongoing sales repeat sales referral sales I'm going to teach you it all it's about 10 steps but they blow into each other and the end part of this video is just as important the points at the end of this video if you don't know them you can't apply the bits I'm going to teach you at the beginning to learn sales you also have to learn patience and perseverance and focus the first thing I want to teach you about sales is that some people like to call it marketing it makes them feel better in the end it's all sales everything is about sales you can call it marketing if it makes you feel that you're cooler it doesn't really make any difference it's about getting people on your side it's about connecting converting and realizing that at the end of the day no business can survive zero businesses would succeed if you didn't sell something to someone now I'm going to teach you a certain type of sales I prefer ethical sales an example of non-ethical sales in my opinion this might seem extreme but I don't want you to fall into this trap is what I call the

they want to trick you they want to make you think that somehow it's cheaper of course on property pricing sometimes they do it to fall within a certain category but they don't really want to sell it at that I think in sales the thing that's not said enough is be [__] honest be authentic I never see anyone all these sales [__] courses I see people selling telling you to do that they talk you about NLP where you can trick people or using words to manipulate people I even saw a recent video where someone was talking about how they pretended they didn't have the product anymore so that the customer would then buy this is all [__] it's a way of tricking people into getting a quick sale which is quick money the quicker you go up the quicker you come down don't listen to this [__] the best sales people in the world the best way to sell is authentic make a connection with someone and that person will be with you forever I sold my very first thing at 15 years old with no sales experience I was honest I said to someone I need money I want to do your garden please pay me they saw the authenticity I had no brocher no website no sales training and they said yes and I think today this word authenticity is not used enough in sales and initially you might even reject it write it down it's key to sales if you're authentic you don't just sell once to someone you sell again and again and again I recently took my wife to the mini garage to buy her a car and when we looked through all the different options the salesperson knew that none of these options suited my wife the best thing she did was say you probably should buy a Tesla now I know it sounds crazy someone in a mini garage working for BMW telling us to buy someone else's car but you know what it did it made us connect to that salesperson it made us leave our contact information with that salesperson and when that sales person does contact us she's understood our needs we probably buy something off her she didn't try to sell us something we didn't need I've done exactly the same in the past I got some part-time work in a clothing shop when I was young someone put on a suit I know that the shop wanted to sell it but I told the person it didn't look good on them and from that moment onwards they trusted me I only worked there for the summer but they trusted me forever I know this authenticity thing is real I don't know how to convince you other than to tell you it's made me Rich from being poor and I know you're going to watch a million other videos often ones that charge you to tell you this is how you trick people into selling don't apply this in your life and you'll have a better long-term relationship with everybody you sell to I sold coaster ads an advertising product to someone 20 years ago

now maybe a little bit longer than 20 years ago they bought it they then worked with my agency they then invested in my businesses they then partnered with me for two decades or because I sold them something that I authentically believed would help their business and it did I delivered I over delivered and that's the second step in sales whatever you sell you want to be able to over deliver right and how do you over deliver in sales you make sure that what you're selling you believe in you make make sure you don't say something that isn't true about the product even if someone tells you to do it if you're working somewhere and they tell you to sell something that isn't true it's your personal brand on the line don't do it walk out that door only sell what you can deliver on and I know quite often in the sales process in the excitement of selling you want to promise much more than you can guarantee well then break

it into those two parts say this is what I can guarantee and this is what I hope might happen an example I've had many times in my life is PR companies that sell they come to me and they say Simon we'll get you in every major newspaper in the world and then they'll pay they want me to pay a monthly fee and they make that promise but the ones I've worked with the ones that have come and said this is our plan to try and get you coverage in every newspaper in the world for what you're trying to do to help people s this is what we'll try to do this is what we guarantee we'll do we guarantee to write up a good press release we guarantee to take good pictures to put you into the Press we guarantee we've got a good mating list of people that should write about you but we cannot guarantee they're going to write about you and those are the people I want to work with forever these are the sorts of people you want to work with these are the sorts of people you want to be authentic and don't overpromise the third thing in sales and in a minute I'm going to get to what I think is the glue that puts this all together but the third thing in sales you always need to do is find your own style now I have seen introverts do amazing things in sales and the key um a lot of people think only extroverts can sell right people that like people are the only ones that can sell it's not true I don't know how this stuff becomes a belief system for us all it's not true in fluid my agency business that I sold a price waterhous Cooper the best salesperson in that company was my accountant why

well I did my job I'm going to come to that in a minute I trained her properly right in fact I write it down now right train a team to all think sales I'm going to come to un explain this bit one a minute but she basically would go and have lunch with other CFOs other accountants and they'd be asking her what she's doing and she'd be talking about how the business she was working at fluid was turning companies around was saving businesses was changing the world making sure people didn't lose their job and make sure these companies survived and she said it because she loved the company and she believed in it and you know what happened those CFOs would go back to the boardroom and tell their CEO and then next thing you know we get a phone call and email asking for a meeting for us to get involved and work with them she was the best salesperson I was actually labeled up as the salesperson INF fluid but she was the best salesperson I got my best leads from her the point I'm trying to make here is find your style find how you like to sell it doesn't matter what I tell you to do it matters what you can naturally do so for example if you like to write blogs go on LinkedIn go on these blog sites and write blogs about your specialty about what you find interesting go out there and apply yourself in a way that is comfortable for you there is a famous quote around marketing and sales which is 50% of what I spend on marketing gets lost gets wasted I just don't know what 50% the truth is most of the time when we're selling the best sales people don't even know they're selling you're just sharing knowledge sharing information being proud about your product or service and that in itself causes a sale you got to find your style lean into that Groove whatever it is if you're an introvert then lean into that if you're an extrovert lean into that I'm going to get into specifics of types of selling in a minute and break down the different types of selling um but I just want to initially just set you up with the right mindset so authenticity don't oversell always over deliver and find your style I'm going to get into the specifics of the different types of sales that you can do to get the business you need to sell yourself to sell your business to get the client cents and to Holy Grail I think get clients to promote you the fourth thing I briefly mentioned a second ago is train the team in sales a lot of the time the best people to sell you are the people you work with so that can be your clients that can be your colleagues that can be your mom it doesn't really matter you want everybody who's involved in your life to be selling what you're selling and that means that they are trained

now it might sound weird if I tell you to go train your mom to sell your product and your mom might initially reject it but if you explain the product to her in a way that excites her it means that it supports you she will be your best salesperson now I don't want to miss out the dads don't forget to also train them up everybody should be your salesperson but it's up to you to train your team and make sure that that's the case now number five I want you to know the rules of selling and they are teachable I don't know why they don't teach you this at school I think I know why they don't want you to be free but I know for fact there are three steps to getting any sale any sale I don't care who you are or what your skill set is if you follow these three steps you will get any sale most people start with the last step first most people start with this is my product and this is how much it is it's a mistake that's not how you sell the first step is very simple identify who could buy your product you've got to actually know the person who's going to buy it understand if they really need it so for example you may have seen the thing sell me this pen in the movie Wolf of Wall Street right most people when I give you this pen we'll start selling it the first question you need to ask is not would you like to buy this pen and this is a lovely pen do you like do you like blue look at it it's nice and strong and it's good brand it will last for forget all that [__] first thing you need to say is do you need a pen do you need a pen now people say no then you ask them when in the future might need a pen you break down when the desire and the need for this product might occur and if you're not sure and I I ran a service business for 15 years you don't know when people actually needed my business services so what did I do every single month for 9 years I contacted Brands like apple somehow with something to help them remember me you have to be there when the sales is needed if you sell someone a pen then they don't need a pen you're going to waste your time you're going to waste their time and you're going to be frustrated thinking there's no Market fit for your product identify the client what they actually need do they actually need your product if they need your product then you can move on to the second stage and the second stage takes a bit of work which people can't be bothered to do and they wonder why they get less reaction on sales the second step is understand the person you're selling to make a relationship in an ideal situation you like them and they like you you want to like them because if you sell something to someone and you don't like them or they don't like you your life's going to be a nightmare even if there is a product Market fit and they need a pen you don't want to be caught in a situation where they have bought something from you and you don't like them and they don't like you the irony or the other spin on this is if you've got this first two steps right you know they need the product they need you second you like each other the people selling and people buying like each other you need each other and you like each other I have never

not completed the third stage of those first two were in place the third stage is here's my product this is what it does this is the service it offers I guarantee you that third step will be completed if you get the first two right I've even had cases where clients have said to me this is the amount of budget I've got this is what I'm willing to do Simon they tell me how to write the contract to get the third bit right they tell me what to price it as sometimes more than I thought I was going to charge or needed at the time to charge to support me because they like me and they need our service they want us to do well they want us to make profit when you identify these things sales gets a lot easier now there's another very important part of sales but I wanted first of all before I move on to the next bit to make sure you understand sales is a system it's a system that process is a system now the three steps to sales I've just told you there I'm going to tell you obvious things you need products like pipe drive you need tools that allow you to track the sales so for example when I was selling for 9 years to the client I wanted to win win I had to track every month what I had done and if someone else came in and took over the sales process for a little while I had a system in place like I mentioned earlier I would send them a Christmas present I would send them a newsletter I would send them a happy birthday note I would send them some industry news that I just noticed might help their business do better I didn't always sell them but I always connected to them and you need a system things like pipe drive to do that you need products that help you remember who you're contacting and remember the process of always connecting so systems the three step process and then making sure you've got the tools to help you do that process next up number six on the list leverage in sales you need leverage leverage sales is basically where you perhaps are a new company a new brand no one knows you yet and if I um if I contact a company and I had this experience when I started fluid I would ring up a company and I would say hi my name is Simon from fluid and I'd like to help you with your marketing and they were like they didn't have we're too busy go away or hang up you're all going to have this experience right rejection is something you need to get used to in sales I don't need to tell you that but I think the the thing with Leverage is if you can get one brand name or one client on board and maybe initially you have to do it free in some cases um you can leverage that brand to help your own brand lift up so for example my company we managed to get CNN as a client this is back when CNN was a good brand we managed to get them on board as a client and we did a great job for them and what we then did is I would ring up and say hi I'm Simon squib I'm working with CNN on a project I wondered if I could come and talk to you about your company and what we could do to help you so suddenly now and this is 10 years ago CNN was a more respected brand but then CNN then that name allowed us to get in the door with other people it's it's it's a delicate one because I don't want you to lie but I want you to see how you've got to leverage what you've done and what you've got now to get CNN as a client we have to do a free piece of work for them so sometimes that's an investment in leverage you need to make an investment in leverage now of course you also have to do a good job for that client because if they then oh I know CNN or I know John at CNN and they check reputation matters so make sure you've got your reputation in line do a good job for people but I think Leverage is perfectly fine and perfectly normal it's a good way of helping people who hear your first sentence connect to who you are if you're working for a Big Brand they think right you must be a good company so use leverage in sales number seven on the list is don't sell a product sell the outcome of the product too many people when they go to sell something tell you exactly what product they've got instead of focusing on the outcome that product can bring you if you use it for example the terminology I've used before on this is sell the sizzle not the steak right so so you don't sell the actual steak there's millions of steaks out there sell the feeling of the steak if you look at adverts like hug and us they're not telling you about the ingredients because if they did you probably wouldn't eat the [__] so what you're actually doing what they're actually trying to do is have a feeling of when you eat the ice cream oh love and romance you're with someone beautiful they're creating a feeling right apple is the same Apple what what Intel processor is in an apple can you tell me no one [__] cares right because they're selling a feeling it's got to learn to sell a feeling now I'm going to come on to another point in a minute which is around storytelling but I want you to understand that any product anything you sell is about the feeling so when I was selling fluid I wasn't selling that we were the best marketing company in the world I was selling the fact that we cared about having a result for our clients we prided ourselves on the success of our clients I didn't break down that we did email marketing and SEO and built websites and built competitions and marketing campaigns and adverts and billboards no one gives a [__] about that stuff and that's what everyone else was doing which is why we beat them because we were selling an outcome we were selling the sizzle not the steak there's just so many examples of brands that have actually done well that do this I mean LinkedIn for example sells that you can get a job on that platform you can build your brand on that platform they don't really tell you well there's a like button and there's a comment button and you know you can actually uh DM people and say none of that matters that's just part of what obviously the product does it's what the product gives you that people care about so learn to sell the sizzle what is the sizzle for your product tell me in the comments I want to know what the sizzle is I don't care about the steak number eight this one might seem obvious I'm surprised how many people don't do it only sell what you believe in it's easier to sell something you genuinely believe in too many people are selling things they don't believe in and they are therefore not good sales people or you can be a good sales person selling something you don't believe in you will get sales especially if you follow my rules but at the end of the day sell something you believe in it's so obvious isn't it sell something I think that has an outcome that makes the world a better place or the person you're helping have a better life sell something you believe in I'm going to put it in here I don't need to talk about it for long um I feel with all my heart that so many people don't actually realize this I have to say it it feels common sense and obvious um but you will find that you are anyone can sell something they believe in that's the irony but so many people don't sell what they believe in so only work with companies well if you're going to work with someone make sure you ask for Equity but that side if you're going to sell something sell something you believe actually brings value sell something you believe can actually make a difference in people's lives number nine now

this type of sales I want to explain to you now can sound a bit like 6 around leverage but actually it's quite different some of the best ways to sell are other people selling for you

now I mentioned this earlier in team training as well but these two ideas blend into 0.9 which is and the best way made to give you an example is a brand I don't really like but they do this quite well um McDonald's sponsor the Olympics right so by leveraging the Olympics as a brand that kind of aspirational uh excitement Community team everything the Olympics does so well McDonald's leverage it they sponsor it and I think brand leverage and team sales alongside this brand partnership model can be a great way to sell your product so if you want to sell something you can look to align yourself with that brand so I just before I did this video I just came off a phone call with liquid def which is this new water brand um I don't know yet we're going to do a partnership with them or not but we can leverage each other's Brands basically they have a message they want to get out there in the world and we have a message that we want to get out there in the world and putting our two Brands together can be hugely powerful I don't know if that's going to happen by the time this video goes out but I'm just trying to teach you something brand Partnerships brand alignment is so so powerful in sales and if I say I'm sponsoring the Olympics or I'm sponsoring the tennis or and maybe that's that sounds like too much money but you just even if it's your local football club if you go and support your local foot football club go fix all their Billboards and you're a carpenter maybe they'll give you the billboard for free but you align yourself I'm supporting my local football team you align yourself to your values to their values you lift each other up by these Partnerships

I call this $1 + 1 = 11$ it's an underutilized way of selling and just like asking your customers or your team to sell you or using the leverage system I mentioned earlier $1 + 1 = 11$ could be a very powerful way to get your brand out there it doesn't always require money like the liquid death partnership that we have neither of us will probably pay money and we just put our resources in the middle together to create something fun hopefully for you to help you have a better business life but I'm trying to explain a very important fundamental of sales I've learned that $1 + 1$ equals 11 number 10 I'm going to call this the emotional sale I mentioned earlier the three-step process to getting any sale done and that's absolutely true there is a very delicate and Powerful way to sell that I find hard to explain but it basically is best explained by understanding that people are people and an example is recently I launched

my book what's your dream on Amazon it's pre-sale we went to number one on Amazon the day we launched number one and no one's even read the book no one's even reviewed the book now no most books need lots of reviews before they'll get purchased just like products we have zero views on that book zero and it's number one on Amazon why because I used a method that I think you can only use if you genuinely genuinely feel it and that is the emotional sale so instead of saying my book will teach you X my book is amazing which I think it is by the way please buy it I said Instead This Book is about a movement it's not give and take that's going to make us survive in the future it's give without take we have to get back to how we used just help each other because we can if you buy this book you're not getting all my knowledge for free if you're buying this book to get all my knowledge for free don't buy it my knowledge is for free on this

YouTube channel you can subscribe to this YouTube channel right now and get all my knowledge for free it will cost you nothing do not buy the book to get my knowledge for free buy the book to support the mission I want more people to know that if they give without take they'll get far richer than if they give and take you can only get so much when you give and take it's a transaction every time that requires you selling time most of the time where you give without take there unlimited upside to what the universe will give you I've run this experiment for The Last 5 Years I know it to be true go buy my book support give without take if you believe in what I'm saying that's what I said thousands of people bought the book because it's not about buying the book it's about supporting a mission emotional sale I think Elon must does an emotional sale nearly in all his businesses he's like buy Tesla because [__] we've got to do something to save the planet you know buy Tesla because I'm [__] the other car companies I'm I'm more valuable than all than them all I don't think he is anymore as a car company but but the concept is like he he he's selling buy my car to save the planet buy my car now before it's even out and let's [__] these awful car companies that have sold us petrol car cars for years and years and years this has to be really authentic like the emotional sale is one of the hardest sales because it has to really be true otherwise people see right through it and then you're [__] you destroy your personal brand you destroy your business longterm no one comes back has to be true but if you do it right it's hugely powerful I've seen a brilliant clip Don paper sells the Kodak Carousel which is um it's a fake scene but it actually happened and what he does brilliantly in the clips down below watch it at the end of this video

he does a slideshow as to why people the company should use his company to buy the product and in that slideshow he shows pictures of himself on the couch of his kids looking like a slob just being genuinely honest and authentic with himself and at the end of the video when you watch it you'll see what I mean I cried you'll cry the emotional cell is also about showing yourself showing up showing why you're doing stuff really being vulnerable being open feeling the pain showing people that you're real and normal and honest and why you're doing something is bigger than yourself if you can do this emotional sell I think it's one of the most powerful I think my book getting to number one on Amazon without any reviews on a pre-sale is unheard of because of this technique right and I say technique Loosely and carefully it's not a trick it has to be real it can't be a trick that's the thing about sales that people don't seem to explain properly sales is not about tricking people sales is about telling people the truth the story and why it matters to them they'll buy it if it matters to them so that's the 10 points to sales I'm going to tell you a few more things now aren't exactly points but very important please please please learn what sales is really about it's about being authentic it's about having a team around you it's about Community it's about having purpose being authentic all of these things need to happen in sales but there's a couple of really interesting things I know sometimes you need to stand out in sales so you need to leverage tools like PR and marketing and other brands an example I recently heard a story by Rory suland and it's about how they were asked by a dishwasher company how could they sell more dishwashers and one of the things that came up was well why doesn't everyone have two dishwashers now

when I first tell you you should have two dishwashers you probably think I'm mad and what was really interesting and I've seen this play out so many times in in the sales process I've been involved in too it's like out the box thinking helps Brands love you more helps people love you more try things I bought a staircase in Twickenham five stories high en cased in glass it was great PR and I built that platform that staircase platform now to help the community you can go to the bottom of that staircase press the doorbell pit your dream to that doorbell we upload it to 4 and a half million people to help you for free now those those sorts of things and this thing with Rory was really interesting he said that when the dishwasher company came to them they talked about how why don't we ask everybody to buy two dishwashers and of course the company was initially like why would people buy two dishwashers well it turns out if you have two dishwashers you can use one and then when it's finished you can take the stuff out of the dishwasher and use it to eat and then you can put that stuff right back into the second dishwasher in other words you never have to put the plates and dishes and cups in the cupboards something I know I personally have to do I'm rich and I only have one dishwasher how stupid am I but they didn't go with a campaign in the end to promote the concept of buying two dishwashers perhaps that's ludicrous but I really like this out of thebox thinking the wild ideas the wild thinking buy a staircase in Twickenham and turn it into a Dream Factory Madness own two dishwashers Madness you've got to build Madness into sales both from a PR point of view from a marketing point of view and to get the deals and connect to clients be mad enjoy the process of selling have fun laugh humor all of these things will help you [__]

sell so go and have a laugh subscribe to this channel you'll see more people's dreams coming true because of sales than any other reason I'm going to have some chicken now bye

1. The "Rule of 25%" & Relevance Mapping

Source: Indeed Career Research & Sciative Retail Analysis (2025/2026)

This research focuses on the "Cognitive Friction" a customer feels when asked to spend more. For a Landmark associate (e.g., at Max or Home Centre), this provides a mathematical guardrail for suggestive selling.

- Key Technique: The 25% Threshold. Associates are taught that a customer is psychologically most likely to accept a cross-sell if the additional item costs less than 25% of the original item.
 - Example: If a customer is buying a AED 400 blazer, a AED 50 pocket square or AED 80 shirt is a "low-friction" add-on. Suggesting AED 200 trousers immediately triggers a "rethink" response.

2. The "Rule of Three" & Perceived Value Theory

Source: UK POS Knowledge Hub & MDPI Customer Psychology Study

This research explores how visual grouping influences the brain's decision-making process. It moves beyond "verbal" selling and teaches associates how to use the physical store environment to assist their sales pitch.

- Key Technique: Cognitive Grouping. People find items more appealing when grouped in threes due to natural asymmetry that keeps the eyes moving.
 - Frontline Application: When a customer asks for a "good" sofa, the executive should present three options: the Baseline (Budget), the Standard (Your target sale), and the Dream (Premium). This utilizes the "Decoy Effect," making the mid-range option seem like the most logical value.

3. Active Listening & "Outcome-Based" Upselling

Source: Erply Retail Research & eduMe Training Insights (2025)

This scholarly approach shifts the associate's mindset from Product Features to Customer Outcomes. It is highly relevant for high-volume Landmark brands where speed often kills the "connection."

- Key Technique: The Visualization Pivot. Instead of listing technical specs, associates are taught to ask "What experience are you hoping to have?"
 - Frontline Application: If a customer at Home Centre is looking for a frying pan, the associate shouldn't just point to the most expensive one. They should ask, "Are you cooking for a large family or just quick meals?" By getting the customer to visualize the use, the upsell to a "Professional Series" pan becomes a helpful recommendation rather than a sales pitch.

Comparison of Associate Techniques

Technique	Method	Goal
Rule of 25%	Keep add-ons under 25% of the main item price.	Reduce "Buyer's Remorse" and friction.
The Decoy Effect	Present 3 options (Budget, Value, Premium).	Drive the customer toward the higher-value "Value" option.
Outcome Pivot	Ask about the "end use" before suggesting a product.	Establish the associate as a "Consultant" or "Expert."

ales professionals often look for ways to sell more products and services. One effective method is cross-selling, which is the practice of selling an item in addition to an item the customer is already going to purchase. This technique can help you increase brand loyalty by offering convenience and boosting customer satisfaction. In this article, we discuss 10 cross-selling tips sales professionals can use to exceed their quotas.

What is cross-selling?

Cross-selling is a sales technique where a company sells a product that complements a customer's original purchase. Companies may introduce the extra item during the shopping experience by advertising it near other goods of interest. Some companies have cashiers introduce the extra item during the checkout process, an approach that often encourages the buyer to say yes. Cross-selling is also popular among online retailers who give customers the option to quickly add relevant items to their carts. Ideally, the extra items are directly related to the original purchase or the customer's unique preferences. For instance, consider someone that buys a hot dog from a street vendor. The vendor realizes that the customer might be thirsty if they eat their hot dog without a drink, so they ask them if they want to add a soda to their purchase. Another example of cross-selling is when a website recommends additional purchases after someone adds a pair of shoes to their cart. Algorithms can recognize the style of these shoes and suggest articles of clothing that complement the user's interests.Related: 40 Sales Strengths Every Salesperson Should Have

Cross-selling vs. upselling

While cross-selling and upselling are both sales techniques, the two terms have important differences. Cross-selling is when a customer buys an additional product, whereas upselling is when a customer buys a more expensive version of a product. For instance, consider someone who orders a small popcorn at a movie theater. It would be cross-selling if the cashier encouraged the customer to buy a box of candy along with their small popcorn. If the cashier convinced the customer to upgrade to a large popcorn, they'd be upselling. Understanding the difference between these two techniques helps you determine when to implement each. For instance, you might use cross-selling if you think customers would get more value out of a combination of products. Upselling is more appropriate for companies that specialize in one type of product. Some sales professionals combine both techniques to offer maximum value while optimizing revenue.

Benefits of cross-selling

Here are some benefits of cross-selling:

- Increases revenue: One of the most obvious benefits of cross-selling is that it increases revenue. The more products a salesperson sells, the closer they are to meeting their quota and increasing company profits.
- Decreases marketing costs: In addition to increasing revenue, cross-selling can boost profits by decreasing marketing costs. Companies use a consumer's preexisting interest in a product to advertise other products of interest.
- Improves customer satisfaction: Recommending relevant products to customers can make them feel valued. It also provides convenience by saving them from going to different stores to get various products.

- Increases brand loyalty: Increased satisfaction often translates to long-term brand loyalty. Customers continually choose companies that offer the products they want and cater to their unique preferences.

10 tips for cross-selling

Here are 10 tips for implementing cross-selling in your sales strategy:

1. Limit the number of recommended products

It can be challenging to convince customers to buy more than what they originally intended to, so try to limit the number of recommended products. You can increase the chance of a successful cross-sale by suggesting one or two of the most relevant items. Fewer recommendations make it easier for customers to see their value and choose the one that suits their preferences.Related: 20 Promotional Sales Ideas To Attract Customers \(With Tips\)

2. Combine products and services

Many companies try to cross-sell products with other products and services with other services. For instance, a shoe store might try to convince you to buy shoe cleaner in addition to your new sneakers. Similarly, a car wash might cross-sell vacuuming and detailing services. If you want to get more creative with your offerings, try combining products and services. For instance, a department store might offer discounted wrapping services with every purchase during the holiday season. Customers are likely to appreciate the thoughtfulness and convenience of this offering.Related: How To Write a Resume for Shoe Sales Jobs \(With Template and Example\)

3. Create bundles

Bundles are a group of related products that consumers purchase at a single price. The total cost of a bundle tends to be cheaper than the cost of a customer purchasing each item individually. These savings can encourage the customer to buy the bundle instead of only the product they originally wanted.

4. Conduct consumer research

Conducting consumer research can help you recommend the appropriate products at the appropriate times. For instance, you might administer surveys to determine what types of items users are most likely to purchase in addition to other items. You can also analyze your website's analytics to determine when to recommend these items. One website might find this ideal time to be during the shopping experience, while another might get better results when they recommend products at checkout.

5. Use the rule of 25%

In some instances, it's appropriate to recommend items that are about the same price as the item the user originally wanted. Companies often use this approach when selling inexpensive items or when a similarly priced item complements the original item exceptionally well. In other cases, a user may hesitate to buy an extra item when its cost exceeds their budget. You can account for this hesitation by using the rule of 25%. This rule claims that users are more likely to buy an extra item when it costs less than 25% of their original item.

6. Create limited-time offers

Limited-time offers create a sense of urgency that compels users to act at the moment. For instance, if you sell toys, you might ask customers whether they want to buy batteries with their purchase. This recommendation is logical, as the toy eventually requires new batteries to continue operating. Stating that the batteries are only on sale for a limited time can encourage customers to purchase them now instead of later. Related: 10 Goals To Develop Yourself and Your Team as a Sales Manager

7. Design convenient displays

Companies that have physical locations can design convenient displays. For instance, if a company sells hot cocoa mix, it might include marshmallows in the same display. This simple strategy reminds consumers to purchase marshmallows with their hot cocoa mix and prevents them from having to go to another part of the store to get the ingredients they require.

8. Provide rewards for extra purchases

A customer who buys more than they intended to may question their choices. The valuable product is often enough to make them feel good about their extra purchase, but you can reaffirm their decision even further by providing rewards. Consider giving them a discount, gift or points toward the company's reward program. Receiving an award often makes customers more receptive to future cross-selling attempts.

9. Ask probing questions

In-person sales representatives have the advantage of talking to customers in person. You can use this opportunity to ask probing questions and make personalized product recommendations. For instance, you might help a customer who's looking for a fun toy for their child. Asking about their preferred price range can help you recommend an appropriately priced toy, but it can also help you recommend additional toys while staying within the customer's budget.

10. Demonstrate the product's value

Customers who see a product's value may be more likely to make an additional purchase. You can highlight a product's features by clearly explaining its benefits and relating them to the customer's needs. If it's a piece of clothing, consider modeling it on a mannequin. In-store samplings are appropriate for food products, and other products may benefit from demonstrations or videos.

What is upselling and what is cross selling?

Cross-selling involves promoting different products from different categories at once.

This encourages customers to make additional, unplanned purchases. One example of cross-selling is encouraging customers to buy biscuits with their tea or coffee.

Upselling, on the other hand, is about encouraging customers to choose a higher-value product than they had originally planned.

An example of upselling is suggesting a higher-priced, luxury type of coffee rather than the store brand.

Cross-selling encourages impulse purchases, whereas upselling increases basket value. Both of these techniques increase average order value, while enhancing the customer experience. When using these techniques, aim to improve the shopping experience for your existing customers, rather than trying to attract new ones.

Research shows that businesses can increase sales simply by cross-merchandising commonly-bought items with less-commonly-bought items to their current customers [1].

A recent study elaborated on this, being the first to demonstrate that, not only can the use of CPDs (complementary product displays) ‘increase sales of an associated focal product’, but also that the noticeability of these displays affects the scale of the impact [2].

Experts in the field stress that that cross-selling is most effective when based on real customer needs [3].

Cross selling and upselling techniques to suit your business

Therefore, always consider what is convenient and appealing to your particular target market, rather than trying to push irrelevant products.

How to cross sell products in retail: 6 ways to cross-sell instore

1. Streamline the customer journey

Cross-selling techniques in retail can streamline the customer journey

Streamline the customer journey by merchandising essential items together, such as placing batteries or lightbulbs with electronics such as games and lamps. Use showcards and poster holders to remind your customers to grab everything they need.

2. Group complementary products

Cross-merchandising techniques include complementary assortments

Merchandise complementary products together, such as a full outfit composed of individual items in fashion retail. Another example would be placing party items such as paper plates, disposable napkins and party hats, alongside cakes and cards.

3. Offer bundled products to increase AOV

Provide samples to help cross-sell and upsell products

Grouping essential or complementary products together in bundled deals can win you more customers based on convenience alone.

Adding a price discount to your bundles is even more effective, as it will appeal to bargain-hunters [4].

4. Provide customers with an experience

Provide samples to help cross-sell and upsell products

Why not hand out free samples of the complementary products so that customers can experience for themselves how well they work together? This technique works particularly well in food retail, such as pairing crackers with cheese or spreads and dips. Place staff members at aisle ends or on deli counters.

5. Implement discount thresholds

Provide samples to help cross-sell and upsell products

Having special offers with basket thresholds is a great way to encourage customers to spend more. For example, 'spend over £20 and get a free gift'. This means that the customers who may previously only have spent £16 are now influenced to spend a further £4 so that they can enjoy the benefits of the free gift, too!

6. Offer additional services with products

Provide samples to help cross-sell and upsell products

Your add-on sales don't have to be just physical products - offer your customers the option to add on complementary services, such as gift wrapping, home delivery, assembly, warranties and club memberships. Advertise these options on your overhead signs, banners and digital displays.

In order to implement effective displays for cross-selling, there are a range of display items that can help. The best point of sale displays for this allow you to display additional items next to a main focal item. Examples include clip strips for shelving, freestanding display units placed at your aisle ends, and dump bins for mid-aisle merchandising.

Placing products with their complements may expose consumers to more relevant categories and thus lead to more impulse and unplanned purchases'

- Roggeveen et al (2019) [5].

Cross-selling techniques include displaying complementary products such as:

Hair accessories with hair care products

Batteries with electronic toys

Belts and cufflinks alongside suits

Sun hats by summer dresses and sandals

Makeup brushes with cosmetics

Garden furniture alongside barbecues or plants

Wines near to steak and lamb

Vegetable peelers by potatoes and carrots

Upselling techniques: how to upsell in retail

The best upselling technique historically seems to be the use of sales representatives to highlight the benefits of the more expensive option directly to the customers. In fact, one research review found that 88% of consumers place higher value in value staff members who suggest "alternative products and services that better meet their needs" [6].

In today's self-service, digital-first retail landscape, however, retailers can't rely solely on their staff members to convey upsell benefits. In the absence of additional staff, utilise your POS merchandising displays and sign holders to convey these benefits too.

A price-promotional sign might be used around cheaper products to highlight the value. Here, use your posters, tags and shelf signs to explain the advantages of choosing the more premium option.

You can even opt to use various digital signs to play your promotions in a loop. Use these to enhance key messages and upsell for you.

Additionally, the shelf height and location of your product arrangement could impact your customers' likelihood of choosing that product. Check out our guide to product placement to learn more about how to position your goods for the best results.

Upselling techniques

How to upsell with a 'good, better, best' marketing strategy

A key upselling technique is commonly known as 'Good, Better Best' product positioning. This involves presenting the customer with three similar items: the budget option of the item they're looking for (i.e. the baseline item), a mid-range alternative, and a "dream" version of the item that may be out of your customers' budget. The objective is to get the customer to pick the highest-priced or the mid-range item.

Cross selling techniques for retail

This upselling technique also plays into the 'rule of three' from cognitive psychology. The rule of three suggests that people find things more pleasant or appealing when they are grouped in threes.

This applies to anything from a trio of products in a store, characters in a story, or courses in a meal. This consumer psychology secret is an incredibly quick and easy way to boost your upselling.

Furthermore, including the budget option makes shopping your range more accessible for low-income customers.

Meanwhile, presenting the 'best' version of your item alongside others can prompt aspirational and luxury shoppers to choose that option.

What are the legal considerations for upselling and cross-selling?

Cross-selling and upselling are legal practices. As with all retail transactions, however, you must comply with consumer protection and advertising laws. The key points to remember are:

Under the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations, you must not deceive customers about the nature, benefits, price, or necessity of an upsell/cross-sell.

According to the Pricing Practices Guide by the CMA, all prices, including those for upsells, must be clear, accurate, and unambiguous.

Upselling and Cross-Selling Techniques for Your Retail Business

An analysis performed by Bain & Company found that effective cross-selling techniques alone increased revenue from customers who bought additional products by 65% or more. How cross-selling works is by offering products that are similar or complementary to what customers have already purchased. Upselling is another technique that retailers can use to increase revenue and customer retention. For many customers, the differences in product pricing aren't reflected in the products themselves. That means they won't buy the product that might be what they actually need simply because they don't know why they need it. Both upselling and cross-selling aren't about using cheap tactics to sell more product -- the benefit is for the customer as well. A study by Ove C. Hansemark and Marie Albinsson found that customer satisfaction drives customer retention. If you can better meet your customer's needs by upselling and cross-selling, you will increase revenue -- guaranteed.

In the early 1990's, Sears began a cross-selling strategy in the financial services industry by offering credit cards to customers. This boosted their retail sales and garnered them 6.4 million credit card holders in 1996 alone. On a smaller scale, cross-selling can still be extremely effective. Here are some examples of cross-selling that you and your staff can use to boost sales:

Wait staff at a restaurant offering dessert. To be effective, an offer has to target the right audience. If the guests brought a bottle of wine with their meal and they ordered an appetizer, then they are not concerned about the extra cost of dessert.

A clothing retailer suggesting a tie clip with the purchase of a tie. In this situation, the salesperson should consider the price of the tie first. Products that are within 20% of the total cost of the tie are acceptable offers. Again, the purpose of cross-selling is to benefit the customer, not to simply sell more things.

Packaging complementary products together. Offer savings on a hot ticket item while including a related or complementary item in the same bundle. This passive approach to cross-selling takes the pressure off of your staff and puts the power into the hands of the customers.

Retarget customers who have purchased with you in the past. This is another passive cross-selling method and works very well. Research from comScore, Inc. and ValueClick Media showed that retargeting is more effective than other targeting methods.

Use cross-selling sparingly and meaningfully. Since the benefit is to your customer, you don't want to overwhelm them with deals and bundles and offers. Instead, you are responding to the customer's needs, whether or not they perceive them.

Upsell for your customer's best interest.

Upselling is about educating the customer about their options and why the items are distinctively priced. The perception of the customer is the focus of upselling, and the relation of quality to cost. When a customer walks into your retail store, they may not know that you have exactly what they need. They might be prepared to pay any price for what they need, but because they think a shirt is a shirt is a shirt, they will buy whatever hits their fancy first. Upselling, then, is informing your customers how higher value items could benefit them. Here are some tips for your floor staff to increase sales from upselling:

Get your customer talking. Find out what your customer's experiences are, and what experiences they are hoping to have as it relates to your products. That means asking questions about the customer -- build rapport and generate a genuine interest.

Listen to what the customer's need is. Better listening is better communication, and active listening is a top priority for salespeople of all walks. Developing active listening skills will increase sales by itself, but it will also make upselling much more effective.

Help your customer visualize the value of what you are upselling. The main object of upselling is illustrating the satisfaction a customer can have with a higher-end product. Definitely, don't push a product on a customer, only show them that there is value elsewhere.
